PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 31.—A very dainty sort of musical comedy, with a consistent if not a remarkable story to hold attention, is The Belle of Brittany, imported from London and with trimmings of a most entertaining sort provided, Frank Daniels presented for the first time in this city at the Adelphia Theatre Monday evening. Daniels, whose droll humor has melted with the passage of years, is the star of the piece, and his nonsense delectable and always of the kind that brings hilarious laughter, kept the audience in the best of humor whenever he was on the stage. The chorus work is always in harmony with the character of music, and in consequence with the situations, and there is no attempt to bring in specialties or to create various electric lighted ensembles. In addition to Daniels, there is a very fine cast of principals. Of these, Winnie Connor, a newcomer to America, made a particularly good impression. Elsa Ryan was a cheery person in another of the roles, and she won approval with her songs and with her dancing. The play has a love story that, like all true love stories, does not run smoothly, but in the end everything comes out right. An entertainment such as this is should find great favor. The Silver Star, the Klaw & Erlanger production, presented Adeline Genée, the nimble footed dancer, in a new guise Monday evening at the Forrest Theatre. Instead of appearing merely in the original dances in the three acts, Mlle. Genée has now a real speaking part in the play. Nellie McCoy, who has not been seen on the stage for two years or more, returned to the stage Monday evening in the Silver Star, and it was soon realized that she has lost none of her grace or attractiveness. Other members of the company who contribute to the entertainment are Bickel and Watson, the droll comedians; Barney Bernard, Emma Janvier and Lee Harrison. The other houses had holdover attractions.

CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

Fine attractions have been the rule at the play houses this week, and the future bookings show an exceptional array of good productions for some time to come. The Honeymoon Trail opened at The Macdonough the first, and gave their performance to good attendance. There was plenty of wit and comedy and a surplus of good catchy music, and the play in its entirety gave the best of satisfaction. Three Twins played to a capacity house on the 4th, and proved to be an excellent attraction with many good features. The company was better than the average, an especially strong hit being made by the Yama Yama Girls. In Old Kentucky will play a week's engagement commencing the 7th. Shore Acres is the current attraction at Ye Liberty, and that the old New England play still retains its great drawing power is attested by the large audiences that have been packing the theatre this week. In the role of Nathaniel Berry, the one long made famous by James Herne, Henry Shumer was at his best, and never in the past has he shown to such advantage. His make up, his mannerisms and even his broad, thick-set physique reminded us very much of Mr. Herne. His droll comedy created continual laughter and then again he caused many a tear with his touching and sympathetic way. In strong contrast to him was the cold, harsh nature of his brother, Martin Berry, as portrayed by Walter Whipple. The character is one that does not appeal very much to an audience, nevertheless the acting of Mr. Whipple was so conscientious and strong that he received much recognition from those present. Andrew Bennison made an ardent lover and Florence Oakley, as Helen Berry, the daughter, played well the part; especially was she good in the house leaving and home returning scenes. As her mother, Mina Gleason was the very essence of naturalness. The children in the play proved a very prominent feature and were the means of making each act as realistic and life-like as possible. In the cast are William Wolbert, Robert Harrison, George Friend, Robert Lawlor, Jesse Mendelson, Bessie Sankey, Maude Odell, Edith Lyle and little Ruth Ormsby. The scenery and stage settings caused much favorable comment and in the third act one could almost see the schooner on the rocks, so natural was the effect. The Traitor will follow. At the Orpheum, Howard & Howard are making a genuine hit and their act seems to be altogether too short to suit the audience. Another fine stunt is the comedy sketch, Nerve, by George Bloomquest & Co. The balance of the program consists of Martinetti & Sylvester, Ballerina Canine Tumblers, Tuscany Troubadours, Six Glinserettis, Carlin & Clarke and Valerie Bergers, and the week's attendance thus far shows a substantial increase. Anna Eva Fay is back again at The Bell. Her mental telepathy always takes well here and the result is that The Bell is packed at every performance. In addition to her work, Edwin T. Emery, Bandy & Fields, Colby & May, and Probel & Ruge fill out a fine program, and every number is well received. The benefit given at Ye Liberty the 3rd, was an immense success in every way. The program was the best ever given in this city by amateurs and a large sum was realized as the entire house was sold out. After The Traitor, Manager Bishop announces that he will present The Rose of the Rancho. This will be the final appearance of Florence Oakley, Bishop's popular and capable leading lady, who will sever her connection with the Liberty Stock Company. Brown of Harvard will be the Liberty attraction Thanksgiving week. Madame Jonelli gives her concert at the Liberty the 17th, and Professor Hinman's pupils will give a violin solo at the same house December 3. The Junior Farce, by the Junior class of the U. of C., will be given Friday p. m., at Ye Liberty.

Manuel Lopez, special policeman at the Bell, chased a burglar over the roofs of buildings for the entire block early Monday morning but failed to make a capture. The thief got away with $100 in cash belonging to Miss Evelyn Wells, a vaudeville performer. Early in the morning Miss Wells was awakened by the presence of a man in her room. She made an outcry which summoned Lopez. He arrived in time to see the thief making his way to the roof of the building, through a skylight. By the time the policeman arrived on the roof the burglar was almost a block away, flying over the tops of the buildings at a breakneck pace. A command to halt did not stay the SAN DIEGO, Nov. 3.—Garrick Theatre (J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Oct. 29-30, Fifty Miles From Boston, played to two good sized houses and gave universal satisfaction. Oct. 31-Nov. 1, Frazee's Girl Question, with John L. Kearney, played to fair business. The piece is well staged and has a hard working chorus. With the exception of Kearney the principals are ordinary. Nov. 15, The Land of Nod. Coming, In Old Kentucky, Man of the Hour. Pickwick Theatre (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—The Charles Kink Stock Company is putting on When Knighthood Was In Flower this week at the Pickwick in an exceptionally fine manner. Charles King is doing excellent work as Charles Brandon. His interpretation of the part entitles him to the highest encomium of praise. Marporie Rambeau as Mary Tudor has a good part and handles it admirably. Louis Morrison as King Henry handles his part in his usual satisfactory manner. J. Franklyn McDonald as Cardinal Woolsey also gives a good interpretation. Pietro Sasso and Ernest Van Pelt do good work. Lillian Burnett as Queen Katherine and Auda Duo as Mary's Companion play their respective parts in a pleasing manner. The scenery and costumes are worthy of mention. Scene Artist Payton has certainly done himself proud in painting the different sets this production. Excellent business continues to rule. Queen Theatre (John Donnelan, mgr.)—Bothwell Browne and his travetsy on Cleopatra head the bill at the Queen this week and scored a solid hit. Browne is an exceptionally clever impersonator, many of his audience being in doubt as to whether he was a man or woman until he removed his wig. He has surrounded himself with a company of three people who gave excellent support. The act is very well dressed. Mondane Phillips, who is billed as the Girl With the Many Voices, from an applause standpoint ran a close second to Browne. She has an excellent act, but she could improve it immensely by opening with some catchy song. Johann and Mott, Those Leipsig Chappies, have a musical act that went fair. The violin playing of one of the boys is the best part of the act. Will Morrissey, the College Boy Monologist, has a good act. His singing is very pleasing. Good motion pictures conclude. Good business. Star Theatre—Motion pictures of the Toledo Encampment. Fair business. Empire, Bijou and Union Theatres—Motion pictures and illustrated songs. Report good business.

CARL E. LUNDQUIST.

MARYSVILLE, Nov. 2.—Oct. 28, The Three Twins played to packed house, and scored a tremendous hit.

Headed by Victor Morley (Third Twin), who played the part to perfection, and an all-around up-to-date company puts the Three Twins show with the "best ever." Bessie Clifford in her Yama Yama dance gave something entirely new and made a hit. Nov. 1, The Time, the Place and the Girl, a clever, clean-cut show. Delightful music, funny jokes, pretty girls and a snap and a go in all three acts. Robert Pitkin, as Happy Johnny Hicks, did clever work. Nov. 6, The Third Degree.

MARCUSE.

OROVILLE, Oct. 28.—The audience at the Atkins Theatre in Oroville on Tuesday night listened to an impassioned speech that was not on the program. The Bandilola Lena Rivers Company was playing and a certain contingent insisted on seeing cause for laughter during the portrayal of a most touching scene. The villain had just been foiled, the wayward girl had returned home or something of that nature and the thespians were straining their vocal chords in depicting their emotions when a loud guffaw rang through the house. The play stopped right then and there. One of the members of the company stepped to the footlights and informed the audience that the company was not made up of Edwin Booths or Sarah Bernhards. If they were it would not be necessary for them to play in Oroville. His English was strong and emphatic and left no doubt as to his opinion of the behavior of some gallery gods.

PORTLAND, Or., Nov. 1, 1909.—Bungalow Theatre, (Calvin Heilig, mgr., William Pangle, resident mgr.)—This house has been dark since the engagement of Chauncey Olcott in Ragged Robin, and does not reopen until the middle of the week, when Billie Burke comes in Love Watches. John Young, in the new musical comedy Lo, follows. Portland Theatre (Russell & Drew, mgrs., Frank Hood, resident mgr.)—Owing to the fact that the bookings of the Shuberts are not in first class running order as yet, it was necessary for the management to place Charles A. Taylor's Company as the attraction for this and next week at this theatre. Last night they offered the melodrama entitled The Girl from Alaska as the bill, and it drew a good sized house. The play deals with life in the far North, also with the society doings in the metropolis of this country. Elizabeth Hale was cast in the leading role, and gave us some good emotional acting, while William Thorne was convincing in the lead. The comedy was well taken care of by Greenville Goddard and Nellie Jones. Next week—A Girl of the Sidewalks. Baker Theatre (George L. Baker, mgrs., Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—The McRae Company are the attraction at the Baker this week, and their vehicle is The Spoilers. It opened yesterday to packed houses. The play was done here some time since by The Frawley Company, and the McRae Company are just as good in the play as their predecessors were. Allen Holuber is playing the leading role of Glenister, and Grace Kern is cast as Cherry Melotte, and to these two the honors must go. Margaret Oswald, who is cast in the lead, was not convincing. Herbert Ashton and Lily Branscomb both gave good performances. Next week—Honeymoon Trail. Orpheum Theatre (James H. Errickson, mgr.)—The merits of the past week's bill are so many that it's really hard to pick out the one that should be given stellar honors. The team of Kelly & Kent it seemed to me though hit hardest, and they surely left nothing to be desired. The Tempest and Sunshine Trio proved to be three of the cleverest singing and dancing teams that has come this way, while the Pandur Brothers do some heavy work in their physical strength act which is refined and interesting. This week's bill—Edwin Stevens and Tina Marshall are headliners, and the other acts are DeHaven Sextette, Carmen Troupe, Howard's Musical Shetlands, Ferrell Brothers, Milt Wood and Walter Lewis. Lyric Theatre (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—An Innocent Sinner is the title of this week's melodrama. The play deals with life in the mountains of Tennessee, and it is melodramatic enough to satisfy the cravings of any one along these lines. It drew good houses yesterday, and the Athon Company seemed to be perfectly at home in the production. Will D. Howard is playing the hero this week to Miss Knowles' heroine, and both won the audiences present yesterday. Alice Condon, Minnie Gerschell, G. L. Walling and Percy Kilbride were well cast in the minor roles. Grand Theatre (Frank Coffinberry, mgr.)—This week's bill is as follows—Kitabanzai Troupe of Japs is headliner; other acts offered include Ed. Gallagher & Co., John Strugeon & Co., Steele & Edwards, Dorothy Dahl, the McAvoyes and Fred Bauer. Pantages Theatre (John Johnson, mgr.)—For this week the acts announced are Mlle. Florine and her troupe of leopards, Buckner, Ned Nye, Seymour's Happy Family, The Clarkes, Leo White and J. C. Mack & Co. A. W. W.

SPOKANE, Nov. 1.—At the Auditorium, Blanche Bates will be seen as Anna Granger in W. J. Hurlbut's play, The Fighting Hope. Miss Bates has scored a success in the leading role of the Hurlbut play. Her engagement will be for three nights, 1-3, and matinee Tuesday, beginning 4. The next attraction will be a revival of King Dodo, the Pixley and Luders success which is being offered this year by John Cort. In the company are Eleanor Kent, William Friend, William Herman and others. In Wyoming, at the Spokane, opened a week's engagement to a good house. Cecil Kirk has resumed the leading part after an absence of several weeks. He has been dangerously ill, having collapsed during a performance not long ago, but went through the play last night well in spite of this handicap. Next week—Forty-five Minutes from Broadway. The headliner at the Orpheum last week, The Devil and Tom

Walker, with J. B. Hymer and a company of 10 people, was the most talked of sketch that has been seen here for many a day. Ben Welch, in his original Italian-Hebrew characters, was excellent. Quaint Little Patrice in the Lobbyist was well received. The bill was a strong one. This week's bill is a good one and opened to the usual packed houses Sunday. It includes Wm. E. Thompson and his players in Pride of the Regiment, The Great Kirschoff Siberian Troupe, Russian Singers-Dancers, Dan Quinlan, Mack Keller in The Traveling Dentist, The Two Bobs in a musical skit, Before the Party, James F. MacDonald in songs-sayings, Mabel McCane presenting her own sons, Paul Kleist in The Land of Dreams. An attractive program is shown at the Washington, headed by Sydney Deane in the vocal novelty, A Christmas on Blackwell's Island, the scenic and electrical effects being extremely novel and beautiful. The acrobatic feature of Nat Nazarro Trio is the midget with the troupe, who is tossed about like a ball instead of a human being. A German comedy playlet entitled, A Thanksgiving Eve, by George X. Wilson-Camille De Wonderville. Leon Rogee, the Human Orchestra, imitates every kind of musical instrument used in an orchestra. An Australian importation is Miss Gertie Everett, who will present her original songs and stories. At Pantages—Deltorelli-Glissendo are top liners. They are direct from Europe and are known as The Musical Clowns. Herbert's Dogs and Cats are also a feature act. The act contains about 20 animals. James K. Waters, character singing comedian; Billy Keene and Jesse Adams, English society entertainers. Dedway and Lawrence do a singing and dancing act in one, the dancing being the feature of the act. Coyne & Linlin, artistic hand balancers and acrobats, offer something new. Wm. D. Gibson song illustrator close the bill. Morris Meyerfeld, president of the Orpheum circuit, will be in Spokane the latter part of this week. With other Orpheum officials he is on his way from Los Angeles to the East, where the circuit is now active in securing new theatres. SMYTH.

SEATTLE, Nov. 1.—Moore Theatre—The Talk of New York, with Victor Moore in his original role of Kid Burns, started the week at the Moore Theatre last night to big business. The play is the usual George M. Cohan combination of slang, music and melodrama, and everybody and everything was applauded. Mr. Moore is a quiet comedian but his efforts are successful. The engagement of Billie Burke in Love Watches ended Saturday night, and was a success clear through. Miss Burke is one of the most beautiful and captivating actresses on the stage, and Seattle was delighted to see her. Alhambra Theatre—The second week of The Great John Ganton promises to be larger than the first one, for George Fawcett has made a name for himself in his admirable characterization of John Ganton, and he has a splendid supporting company. Grand Theatre—John E. Young and his company are still with us in Lo, which has already enjoyed seven days of prosperity at the Grand Theatre. Underneath the comedy and music there is a plot of more than ordinary interest. From Seattle the routing of the company will take the attraction back to Chicago. Seattle Theatre—People were turned away yesterday at both performances of The Fatal Wedding, by the Russell & Drew Stock Company. There is a great deal of interest in the lives of the characters, and as the managers have given the play an excellent mounting, a tremendous week's business is in order. Lois Theatre—An ambitious stock attempt is being made by the Lawrence Sandusky players in the production of Hall Caine's great play, The Eternal City, but it is done in good style and should draw the largest crowds of the season to the Lois. Majestic Theatre—Tom Linton and a half dozen pretty girls are heading the Majestic bill. It's all quality singing and dancing. Hoey and Mozar, in a song, dance and talk melange, are great funmakers, and Nellie Burt is another. George Wood has a unique line of comedy, and W. C. Hoefler is counted a fine eccentric. The Brothers Damm will offer an acrobatic turn of exceptional worth. Orpheum Theatre—John B. Hymer and his company of ten in the screamingly funny travesty, The Devil and Tom Walker, are the big joy number. Ben Welch, America's greatest impersonator of Italian and Hebrew characters, is another funmaker, and Patrice, with her company in The Lobbyist, is another strong bid for popular favor. The Duffin-Redcay troupe, "casters"; Vittoria and Giorgetta, European equilibrists; Chassino, the shadowgraphist, and the Hopkin sisters, complete a bill of exceptional strength. Pantages Theatre—Heading the list of acts, all of them seen here for the first time, is Capt. Stonewall's performing sea lion. This wonderful animal does some of the most astounding feats, as, for instance, riding a galloping pony and balancing a large ball on its nose at the same time. As a juggler, this sea lion is in a class all by himself. Among the other acts are Swift and Casey, W. S.

Myrtle Vane

That clever emotional leading woman, Myrtle Vane, has been engaged by Manager Ed Redmond to play his feminine leads in San Jose, opening Nov. 15 at the Garden Theatre. Mr. Redmond writes us that this company will be the strongest he ever had, and in selecting Miss Vane he made no mistake. In addition to an unusual emotional ability, Myrtle Vane is a wonderful comedienne and a singer of great charm and power. She numbers her admirers by the score and her conquests from San Diego to Vancouver.

A prominent manager in writing to THE DRAMATIC REVIEW states, "I am sorry to say that the theatrical business in the East does not show any improvement over last season."

San Francisco is not to have a play censor. It has been officially decided by the Board of Supervisors that anything may go in the city by the Golden Gate, from Ibsen to The Girl From Rector's. Librarian J. W. Cummings of the Mechanics Library was the person responsible for lulling the proposed ordinance into a sleep from which it will never waken, when the matter came up for consideration before the police and judiciary committee last week.

Performing Cats Not Tool of Her Trade

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—According to the treasury department, cats are not tools of trade and therefore Mrs. Alice Thiemann will be compelled to pay 20 per cent duty on the 100 performing cats which she recently brought to this country for exhibition. Mrs. Thiemann entered the animals as tools of her trade.

Suit For Royalty

BROOKLYN, Nov. 1.—Miss Julia Marlowe, becomingly gowned in a costume of black and green, and E. H. Sothern, appeared before Justice Clarke in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, last week, as defendants in a suit to recover $9,000, brought by Miss Dirce St. Cyr, of Manhattan, because of their failure to produce D'Annunzio's tragedy, The Daughter of Jorio, which she translated from the Italian. Both Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe testified that the translation was unsatisfactory. They believed that the $1,000 in advance royalties they paid Miss St. Cyr, was sufficient, inasmuch as a great deal of money besides that sum was expended in a vain attempt to whip the play into shape for production here. Justice Clarke held, however, that as the actors had contracted to produce the tragedy and to pay Miss St. Cyr a minimum royalty of $50 for one night every week of the season, there could be no valid excuse for their failure to do so. The court reversed decision on the amount of payments due and left to the jury the question of length of the theatrical season. It decided that it extended for thirty weeks, and Justice Clarke will base his award to the plaintiff on that verdict.

FLORENCE OAKLEY closes with Ye Liberty stock in Oakland two weeks from Sunday in The Rose of the Rancho.

KATHLEEN TAYLOR, leading woman with Harry Beresford, has closed her engagement with that company and is taking a much needed rest at Abilene, Texas.

ALICE WEEKS, who is playing the lead in The Ringmaster in Los Angeles, was taken ill in Los Angeles, and her part is being played temporarily by Miss Lee.

The Persse-Mason company in The Singing Bandits, closed in Santa Cruz Sunday night. Business had been bad, but the show left a fine impression everywhere.

Apparently, the city dads have thought better of this radical measure, for there has now been fixed up in committee a new license bill, which has every prospect of passing, raising the licenses to $150, or just double what they have been in the past. This new rate suits the city, and it is said that there will be no protest from the theatre managers.

Van Ness Theatre

James Forbes has shown in his latest play, The Traveling Salesman, a distinct advance over his first attempt, The Chorus Lady. The Traveling Salesman is a comedy play of types, with just enough of a story to hang action on. It is adroitly constructed and is brimful of unforced humor and is presented by an excellent company. Mat Smith, who is the traveling salesman, amongst a group of other clever and entertaining men of the road, is a tall, big, fine looking chap, who "has a way" with him that is extremely winning. Notwithstanding a very bad style of speaking his lines, he wins thoroughly through sheer force of a delightful personality and it would be a pessimist indeed who would fail to be agreeably influenced. James O'Neill, Jr., who is the son of his father, but unlike his father, not so much as a romantic or classical actor, finds his forte in comedy work, and his portrayal of Ted Watts is all to the good. Emmett Shakelford, who is a rarely fine character actor, doubles two small parts with good results. By the way, it might be recalled that Mr. Shakelford was the original of Shorty with Wm. Faversham in The Squaw Man, and that keen student of the plains publicly proclaimed Shakelford's depiction the best bit of Western characterization he had ever seen. Duane Huncker, who only lately stepped from newspaper work to the stage, is a really great character woman. Her Mrs. Babbitt is a triumph of feminine comedy work. Miriam Nesbitt, who plays Beth Elliott, the telegraph operator, is a charming, refined and artistic young actress. Her acting is the simulation of artistic realism. The other members of the company, including the children, handle their parts effectively and give full value to the play.

Alcazar Theatre

Of all our native dramatists, none occupies a place more peculiarly his own than does the late James A. Herne. He had his own views regarding the writing of plays, of which more will be said later on, and while he was not always successful as a dramatist, he did at times strike chords that found a responsive note in the hearts of humanity. Shore Acres is one of the greatest successes from his pen. While no company is so poor that it can completely spoil it, at the same time a good company adds much to its presentation. This latter state is the condition at the Alcazar. The bill is acted flawlessly, and staged in a manner that would demand admiration of Broadway. Of course, the lions share of the honors have fallen to Fred Butler, assuming as he does, the lovable character of Uncle Nat Berry. Will Walling is extremely good as Martin Berry. Walling may fall down sometimes, as the ardent lover, demanded of the conventional leading part, but in characters such as that of the brother, he is excellent. E. L. Bennisson is well cast as Josiah Blake. A small part excellently done is that of Joel Gates, the hungry farmer, acted with understanding and discretion by Charles Dow Clark. Samuel Warren, the lover, is presented with all the ability that Howard Hickman possesses. The part of Helen, assigned to Evelyn Vaughan, was played with appreciation of the good points of the character. Christie McLean was well placed as Perley, the hired girl. There are others in the company who deserve a longer notice than can be allotted to them here. George Baldwin as Captain Ben; William Garwood as Captain Leonard; Walter Belasco as the mail carrier; Charles Trowbridge as Tim; Roy Neil as 'Squire Andrews; Malcolm Johnson as Young Nat; Alden Wheeler as Abe; Adele Belgarde as Ann Berry; Anne Lockhardt; Margaret Clayton as Mrs. Andrews; Grace Travers as Miss Nye; Myrtle Wagner as Maudy Gates; Mildred Madden as Mildred; Helen Johnson as Mary; Charles Morrison as Bob, and an unknown baby as a baby, were all worthy of congratulations, whether in speaking or thinking parts. As a play, Shore Acres is not what would be called plotty. Herne frankly expressed his contempt for plots, asserting that interesting incidents and episodes were all that was necessary to make a play attractive. He thought he proved this in Shore Acres, as for instance where Uncle Nat helps with the cooking, assists in getting the turkey out of the oven, and in the dinner scene, also. That Herne was mistaken is demonstrated in a later drama, Griffith Davenport, in which incident after incident is crowded on the stage, one after the other. That there must be something to unify these episodes, however, has been demonstrated by the unquestionable verdict of the theatre-going public, who found the latter play a tedious affair, and wholly uninteresting. Shore Acres does not err in this regard, and will remain for many years a popular drama, and one of the best exponents we have of the American rural drama at its best.

Princess Theatre

The Politicians was revived last Monday night by Kolb and Dill. Percy Bronson and Sydney De Gray are two members of the support who acquit themselves with credit. Bronson has two songs, in which the chorus aid him. They are Rock, Rock, and The Old Barn Dance. Sydney De Gray also appears to advantage in several ensemble numbers. Bullan Baer, a young banker, is assumed by Carlton Chase, who gives just the right amount of humor to the part to make it truly effective. The many friends of Mr. Chase were glad to see him back in the company again, after his severe illness, and he has been made aware of their pleasure by kindly receptions during the entire week. Gideon Gray, from Denver, assigned to Richard Stanton, gave that capable young actor a chance to demonstrate his abilities. Olga Stech, who has grown into one of the mainstays of the companies that come and go at this favorite house, was as pretty as ever, and gowned as fetchingly as is her custom, in the part of Lotta Bonds, the daughter of a banker. To complete the review of the company without mentioning the new prima donna, Maud Lillian Berri, would be doing that handsome and brilliant young woman an injustice. Kolb and Dill are to be congratulated on securing so competent a woman as the California nightingale. She is well known here and her well established reputation, added to her great popularity, will undoubtedly make her a big drawing card for all of the productions in which she appears. On the opening night she was the recipient of a lobby full of handsome floral pieces. The Time to Kiss a Girl, Honey Won't You Please Come Down, and a selected number gave the lady a chance to shine lyrically. He who would complain of the scenic equipment of The Politicians would be hard to suit, indeed.

Garrick Theatre

In Old Kentucky, a play that made its first big hit some seventeen years since, is on its annual visit. Mabel Bert, who created the leading female role, that of Madge Brierly, has a disciple in the person of Mildred Johnson. Bert G. Clark, who has played the part of the Colonel during all the seventeen years of uninterrupted success of the piece, except for one season, is just as appealing as ever, in the character of the Southern colonel. There is a band of pickaninnies, too. It is hardly safe to assume that they are the originals, but they play just as well as the first band did, when Old Kentucky started out on its triumphal tour that is to extend nobody knows how long into the future. Queen Bess wins the race now, just as she used to, when some of us were much younger than we are at present. The play is well staged, and the great racing scene goes with all its old-time excitement, noise and gusto. Dickie Delaro, who plays the character part, is an exceedingly clever actress, who is cut out for bigger parts.

Valencia Theatre

The present week is a memorable one at the Valencia. It introduces Eddie Foy after a long absence, and it presents a musical show that has three distinct characteristics: Comedy, enjoyable music and the greatest "leg" exhibition (and then some more) ever seen in this town since the days of the original Black Crook and Adamless Eden. If one has an imagination—oh, well, what's the use. Reader, go and see for yourself, and you'll vote Mr. Hamlet of Broadway a corking good show, just as crowded houses have done all week, and will next. Eddie Foy is the same old Eddie Foy as ever. Funny, hard working, and magnetic, always the central figure and always entertaining. Belle Gold, who is regarded by many as the premier soubrette of the United States, is a striking figure in the success of the piece. Her burlesque of Ophelia is a clever bit of work, and her dancing and coon shouting are so distinctly the "real thing" that she must have made a thorough study of the dialect. Josie Interpodi, who learned the art in San Francisco at the old Tivoli, is one of the big hits of the show. She is one of the funniest comedienne in the business and it is a delight to watch her. Every detail of stage work is at her command. Ethel Interpodi plays the daughter to her own mother, and is a charming and unaffected young actress. The long list of principals are good ones and the show goes with a vim and dash that is vastly entertaining. We almost forgot to mention Alfred Latell, who plays the bear. He is the best bear in our memory. His stunts are great. In fact, the show is great.

Vaudeville

The Orpheum

The big number at the home of classy vaudeville this week is Charles the First. Now, Charles does not belong to the Stuart, but to the monkey family. He is certainly intelligent enough, judged by human standards, to be the king of all monkeydom. To properly describe his turn is hardly within the abilities of the average dramatic writer. He does everything that a man can do, except swear, and will no doubt in time be able to overcome this defect in his education, for the gift of speech is the only thing that Charles First has not attained, that is characteristic of his cousins, the members of the human race. As a bicycle rider, this monkey of high degree has us all beaten. He skates on rollers as though he had been accustomed to the sport all his life. He smokes, blows the smoke through his short nose and out of his ample nostrils with as much ease and grace as we used to do when boys, while smoking forbidden cigarettes behind the barn. Then, too, this simian with a college degree has taste in the matter of clothes, and lives up to them, too. He makes his first entrance dressed faultlessly, looking the glass of fashion and the mould of form. He quarrels with the waiter, sips wine at the dinner table, smokes a cigarette, as stated above, eats with far better consideration as to manners than do most men and women, uses a toothpick, expectorates with deadly aim into a cuspidore, and in fact, behaves very much as you or I might do. The act concludes with Charles removing his clothing and going to bed. He is a sight to behold in pajamas, and adds to the merriment of the scene his personal appearance generates by taking a final stretch, from the bed rail, in true monkey style. There is no questioning the fact that Charles the First is a most unusual monkey, and his trainer has put on the most unique animal act ever seen in this neck of the woods. Minnie Seligman and William Bramwell are not monkeys, but just ordinary folks, who act as good actors are supposed to do, in a very telling little drama of the condensed brand, entitled The Drums of Doom. Both of these thespians are artists, so they do not, as a consequence, get as much applause as Charles the First. Then, too, they have a very serious little play, which does not get one good laugh during the whole time it is on, and not to get a laugh in vaudeville is almost as bad as not trying to get one. These two things are the unpardonable sins of the variety stage. The Bounding Gordons do some clean, clever, and clear cut gymnastics. They are as good in their way as Charles is in his, or Miss Seligman in her own emotional trend. The Boot-black Quartet could be better, and at that, could be improved upon without impairing its usefulness. Hal Godfrey and his company are putting on a better sketch than they did the week before. It is not only better, but it is put on more satisfactorily, and the house accepts it with more enthusiasm than was the case with its predecessor. General La Vine is still doing his clowning juggling act. Mlle. Bianci is a thing of beauty, to say nothing of grace personified, just as she was the week previous.

American Theatre

Aldro Brothers, two clever hand balancers, are creating much interest at the American this week by their clever line of work. Several of their stunts are quite new, and receive a generous hand at every performance. James Polk, a San Francisco boy, is a banjoist par excellence. He had to go East to make good, for they did not think he could do much in his home town, but now people think differently. George Lauder, an Australian ventriloquist, makes his first American appearance at the American this week. His act is novel and is different from the regular ventriloquist acts. In fact, it is what the public want, something new. Meda Moret, a quick change monologist, has a very clever act. The best part of it is, her heart is with her work. She has a great deal of magnetism, an excellent stage presence, and her stuff is bright, clean and catchy. Marion and Rial, two actors who can act, have a dramatic sketch that deserves good time. Miss Rial, who is a woman of most striking appearance, is very graceful, and does work that commands attention. The Three Vagrants, three Italians who are dressed in the manner of street singers of their native land, are like all the rest of the people who do this sort of turn. They have good voices, however. A little novelty injected into the turn would help it a bit, if not with managers, at least with the front of the houses. The Stagpooles are four English people who do some of the most remarkable tumbling that has been seen here in a long time. The word "marvelous" is the best adjective that can be found to describe the character of their efforts. They call their act The Crazy Caddie, but by any other name it would be just as good as it is under its present one.

Pantages-Empire

Milton and Dolly Nobles, favorites of two decades ago, are the big features at the local Pantages house. They have a comedietta called Why Walker Reformed, which demonstrates that Milton Nobles is still skilled in the constructive dramatic technique, and that both he and his wife are yet masters of the actor's art. Lesler and Shannon, two comedians, have an excellent vehicle entitled, Astrology, written by our old-time fellow-townsmen, Junie McCree. It is full of McCree's inimitable slang and goes with a 60-horsepower six cylinder movement from start to finish. The Naples Trio are three Italians, one man and two women, all unknown to fame and to the program, who play ferryboat music most acceptably. Jack Oliver, who is much darker than the olive, does some very funny steps and tells a number of good stories, all in his droll Ethiopian way. Cordua and Maud are a lady and a gentile, both with muscles that would tickle a student of anatomy to death. If there is a muscle in their respective bodies that needs developing, Mr. Cordua and Miss Maud, or Mrs. Maud, as the case may be, would like to know where it is located. Maud is an exceptionally handsome woman, a combination of Venus and of Juno. The moving pictures are as good as the best. The music for

George Williams, manager of the Lyceum theatre, the vaudeville house on Second avenue, near the Savoy, Seattle, sold his lease, fixtures and good will last week to S. ## The Wigwam

Landers Stevens and Georgie Cooper are putting on an abbreviated version of Oliver Twist this week that goes well in front. Stevens appears in the dual roles of Bill Sykes, the English burglar and murderer, and as Fagan, the thieving Jew of the slums. Georgie Cooper is a good Nancy Sykes, rising to heights of emotional ability in the strong scenes of the playlet. Mrs. Gardner Crane, in the farce with the alliterative title, Pixley's Prodigal Parents, was given a great reception on her first night, which has continued all week. William Cahill, who is, it need not be said, from Ireland, is a big scream. He makes good all right. McLellan and Carson do a startling skating act, that gets them by without any difficulty. Willison and Stone do some singing that is quite out of the ordinary in vaudeville at popular prices, and there are some pretty good singers in the three-a-day houses, too. Frank Parker, a heavy weight lifter, introduces an act that shows time, skill and care. He has brawn, and also brains. Anna Eva Fay is a coming top-liner at the Wigwam.

Vaudeville Notes

Ulrich Collins, a native son, who has been stage manager in one of Brady's big companies for several years, is out here again, visiting old friends. When at leisure, Collins likes to improve his time by writing sketches, which, so far, have been very successful. He is playing in one of his own creations, The Pantaloon Skirt, in which Helen Beresford is being featured in vaudeville with great success. She has just closed a week at the National, and is to appear in other local houses in the same vehicle in the course of a few weeks.

Hal Godfrey is in mourning. His magnificent $1,000 pearl and diamond pin disappeared last Monday night. No clue.

Caswell and Arnold, the premier contortionists and barrel jumpers, split after this week. Miss Caswell will work alone in a new novelty act written for her by Ulrich Collins.

Harry Leavitt, formerly booking manager for Sullivan & Considine in Seattle, accompanied by Mrs. Leavitt and Al Hagan, spent last week in San Francisco, on a business lookout. They are in Seattle now.

Shattered is the romance of young Joseph N. Ghirardelli, clubman and society favorite of Oakland and son of the late chocolate manufacturer of the same name. Though the whys and the wherefores of the estrangement that has grown up between him and Marion Murray, the beautiful and talented member of the vaudeville duo known as the Murray Sisters, are veiled behind an impenetrable silence on the part of the Ghirardelli family, it is now admitted that the engagement that resulted last February after a few days' ardent wooing on the part of the young man, is broken. Miss Murray is in the East, on the stage, but Ghirardelli does not know where. His mother is authority for the statement that all is over between him and the beautiful actress who played havoc with young San Francisco and Oakland hearts.

Pony Moore, the founder of the Moore & Burgess Minstrels, whose right name was George Washington Moore, died in London on the 1st of October. Mr. Moore was born on Washington's Birthday, 1815. Forty years later he went to London and started the first negro minstrels at St. James' Hall. As this was something new to the English theatregoers he became famous and made over a million dollars. He never came back to this country, save to visit it once or twice, but was known to be very liberal to the American players who visited England years ago. He was the father-in-law of Charlie Mitchell, the one-time English prize ring champion.

Says a Seattle exchange: Ed Fisher, the Seattle booking agent, today closed a deal by which he will book all of the acts in the numerous ten-cent vaudeville houses on the Coast, managed by D. J. Grauman and known as "Grauman's Little Circuit."

"Sid," how about this "little" circuit? The cornerstone of the new Chutes Theatre was laid last Saturday afternoon, Mayor-elect P. H. McCarthy officiating. The ceremony was extremely simple. The new theatre is a class A structure and will have a seating capacity of 1,400. It is expected the opening will occur about December 15.

Mlle. Bianci, the beautiful dancer at the Orpheum this week, has made a tremendous hit with her beauty and her terpsichorean ability. Some of her admirers presented her with a 50-diamond studded ring during the week. Thurston, the magician, leaves the East on April 10 for a Pacific Coast tour.

Correspondence

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—Such enthusiasm as was displayed after the second act of Israel at the Criterion Theatre last Monday is not frequently seen and heard at a first night in New York. It was the first performance here of Mr. Henri Bernstein's much discussed drama. The audience kept applauding, while the curtain bobbed up two dozen times. All the principals had to appear, of course. But Miss Constance Collier and Mr. Graham Browne were singled out for special marks of approval. Finally the audience ran out of breath and applause and the entré acts proceeded. Israel is based upon hatred of the Jews. A young Parisian nobleman, Thibault, Prince of Clar, is obsessed by the idea of hating the race. The particular object of his loathing is a banker, Gutlieb, a member of his club. Thibault asks Gutlieb to resign, and when he refuses insults him. A challenge is issued. Then Thibault's mother, in a great scene, confesses to her son that Gutlieb is his father. The opponents meet, but Thibault only pinks the arm of his adversary. He returns to his room undecided between entering a cloister and shooting himself. At this moment there comes to him the realization of a great love for a life-long friend, Henriette, and the play ends happily. Miss Collier played the part of the mother. She did a stirring bit of acting in the big emotional scene, but she had to share honors with Mr. Grahame Browne, an English player and a newcomer here, who was wonderfully impressive in the part of Thibault. Edwin Arden was excellent in the role of Gutlieb, while Christine Norman as Henriette was most charming. The minor characters all worked together wonderfully and no opportunity for effect was lost. * * * Mme. Nazimova began her season last week in Hermanus Bleeker Hall, in Albany, with the first performance of The Passion Flower, a new play by Mr. Brandon Tynan, produced by the Messrs. Shubert. Her role is that of Vivien Rodman, wife of a banker in New York, and a woman of unbridled social aspirations, which ruin her husband financially. The play is intended to symbolize a phase of social life. In the cast are the author, Mr. Tynan, and Messrs. Henry Kolker, Ernest Glendinning and Wallace Erskine, Misses Grace Reals, Zeffie Tilbury, Grace Gibbons and Carmen Nesville. The Passion Flower will be brought to New York soon. * * * One of the notable first performances in Toronto was made in the Royal Alexandra Theatre last week, when George Arliss was seen in Septimus, a dramatization of Edwin J. Locke's novel by Philip Littell. The play furnished Mr. Arliss with a comedy role unlike anything he has done in the past, and one with which the audience seemed to be in sympathy from curtain to curtain. Emily Stevens made a strong impression as Emmy. There is a strong touch of sentiment underlying a constant play of whimsical humor. At the close of the second act there were many curtain calls and a speech from Mr. Arliss. * * * Rochester, N. Y., Monday.—Another new detective play, The Coast of France, was produced at the Lyceum Theatre, Rochester, last Monday, for the first time on any stage. Mr. Eugene W. Presbrey wrote the play, founding it on the novel of the same title, by Misses Esther and Lucia Chamberlain. Both the detective and the thief are unidentified by their stage colleagues and the audience until nearly the end of the last, when the denouement comes. The story revolves around the theft of an Oriental talisman ring coveted by a California heiress. Hamilton Revelle and Jane Oaker appeared in the leading parts. Others in the company are Franch Hatch, as an elderly Western judge; Lydia Knott, as a society schemer, and T. Tamamoto, a Japanese actor, in a characteristic part. * * * The Stange-Von Tilzer operetta, The Kissing Girl, was presented at the Cort Theatre, Chicago, last week. The Kissing Girl is unusual in musical comedy, as it has neither show girls nor pony ballet. Amelia Stone has the title part and she is supported by Armand Kalis, Blanche Morrison, George Miron, John Park, Frau Marta George and others. * * * It is creditable to William Faversham's ambitions as an actor manager that he produced Stephen Phillips Herod at the Lyric Theatre last week in such a worthy fashion. So far the New York public has shown little sympathy for the plays of the English poet, which are known to students of the drama and lovers of poetry but remain strange to those who might have been expected to make their acquaintance in the theatre. Charles Frohman introduced the dramatist here with Ulysess, which was dismissed without a hearing, while H. B. Irving's performance of Paola and Francesco created scarcely a ripple in the dramatic waters that flow through West Forty-second street. With such previous indifference to the work of a dramatist who has been called the greatest poet in his own tongue writing for the stage today, Mr. Faversham deserves praise for attempting to interest the public in such a play, and the liberality with which he has set out to realize its spectacular demands makes his right to popular success much greater. Last night the audience rewarded his ambition with every sign of approval. Olive Oliver, as Salome, was perhaps the most distinguished figure in the performance, for her subtlety of action and her sinuous grace added their value to every scene in which she appeared. Helen Tracy brought her artistic judgment and sound training to the interpretation of the mother. A fine sense of pictorial effect guided both the performance of Mr. Faversham as Herod and Julie Opp as Mariamne. Miss Opp in particular wore her striking draperies with a suggestion of truly regal dignity and her poses were invariably plastic and significant. In every external symbol her performance, as well as Mr. Faversham's met every reasonable demand. Miss Opp reads most intelligently and her voice is so rich in quality and her enunciation brought every verbal beauty of the text to the audience. Mr. Faversham's clear utterance was also a source of delight. And so often did the music of Phillips' verse cry the same note of exaltation and inspiration in its delivery. Mr. Faversham's honors last night included the excellent company that he had selected. Cooper Cliffe's mature art showed in the part of Gad-eas, a chief councillor and early A. D. Polonius. Hylton Allen played the brief scenes of Aristobulus with the right touch of youthful ecstasy, and Burton Churchill made Sohemus, the

Gaul, sufficiently brusque and straightforward to contrast with his surroundings. The uncommonly numerous supernumeraries were trained to appropriate expressiveness, and the constant murmur of discord and rebellion which accompany the progress of the drama did not grow so monotonous as they might readily have become. Coleridge Taylor's music received an equally appropriate accompaniment to the scenes. Mr. Faversham's triumph was rewarded by the audience, an unusually intelligent and cultivated one—which compelled him to accept its expressions of gratitude at the close of the play. * * * The most important act in Idols, the dramatic version of William Locke's novel, which is to open at the Bijou Theatre, Monday night, is laid in the criminal court of the Old Bailey in London. During the act a criminal trial, in which the hero of the play is tried for his life on a charge of murder, takes place. This incident in the novel is the most important of the entire story and in the play which Roy Hornimann has made from the novel it is naturally the climax of the dramatic interest. * * *

The Hackett Theatre was closed last Tuesday night by reason of the illness of the star, Elsie Ferguson, who was suddenly attacked by ptomaine poisoning. Miss Ferguson was sufficiently recovered to permit her resumption of the role of the queen in Such a Little Queen at Wednesday night's performance. * * * The Man Who Cleaned Up, is the title for this country of a German farce which Louis Mann has translated and adapted. It was written by Arthur Schnitzler as The Double Man, the title having reference to a man leading a double life. Mr. Mann, himself, is not to act in the piece, but will stage it in association with William A. Brady. * * * The Builder of Bridges, Alfred Sutro's new comedy, was produced last week at the Hudson Theatre, under the direction of Charles Frohman, with Kyrle Bellew in the leading role. His company includes Gladys Hanson, formerly E. H. Sothern's leading woman; Eugene O'Brien, Frank Connor, DeWitt C. Jennings, Ernest Stallard, Mrs. Wiffen, Jane May and Frances Comstock. The play is the chief work of Mr. Sutro since The Walls of Jericho, and is in four acts. It involves the love of Dorothy Faringay, a self-reliant young woman, niece of Mrs. Debney, with two men, to both of whom she is engaged at the same time. * * * The Chocolate Soldier, which began its New York run several weeks ago at the Lyric Theatre, had to give way last week to William Faversham, who had had a previous call upon the Lyric before it was anticipated that the new F. C. Whitney production was going to meet with such a successful run. The Chocolate Soldier therefore moved over to the Herald Square Theatre, where so many previous successes of the Whitney Opera Company have had their New York runs. As was stated in this column at the time the operetta opened in New York, The Chocolate Soldier is George Bernard Shaws Arms and the Man set to music by Oscar Straus to the original libretto of Rudolph Bernauer and Leopold Jacobson. It was put into its present English version by Stanislaus Stange, who has been responsible for many of the earlier Whitney productions like Dolly Varden, etc. There have been two excellent additions to the cast since it was first produced, and it is a pleasure to be able to say that the acquisition of Thomas G. Richards in the title role in place of Jack Gardiner has been a great improvement from the standpoint of artistic singing, for Mr. Richards was one of the best baritones in the Savage Grand Opera Company. Likewise Francis J. Boyle, the former basso profundo of the Savage organization, was a great improvement from a vocal standpoint over our old friend Henry Norman of early Tivoli days. Both of these parts require singers with unusually good voices, and with Messrs. Richards and Boyle added to an otherwise excellent cast it may safely be said that the Whitney Opera Company is today one of the strongest singing organizations in this country, for the cast includes William Pruette, basso cantante; George Tallman, tenor; Ida Brooks Hunt, soprano; Flavia Arcaro, contralto, and Edith Bradford, soubrette. It will be noticed that Mr. Whitney, like Col. Savage, does not handicap his production by a star. His cast is well balanced throughout. By the way, both Miss Hunt and Miss Arcaro were also with the Savage forces. To look at the strong cast of The Chocolate Soldier one might almost imagine that Col. Savage had been taken into Mr. Whitney's confidence as consulting impressario, for even F. P. Weadon, one of the business staff of the Savage office, is now the business manager for Mr. Whitney. But with or without Col. Savage's trump cards, we are glad to welcome Mr. Whitney back into the light opera field. For a few years he has been spending most of his time in Europe looking out for some good production which should prove a winner in America. He seems to have found it in The Chocolate Soldier, and trust it will not be long before he runs out to the Pacific Coast and gives the people out there a chance to hear some real good singing in an opera bouffe replete with the witticisms if not the cynicisms of the inimitable Bernard

Shaw. Louis S. Stern, who was out last season with Eddie Foy in Mr. Hamlet, is the publicity promoter for The Chocolate Soldier, and as he likes California I have hopes that the production may head for the Pacific Coast after its successful run here in the East. * * * One of the best money makers in a musical comedy line this season is Charles Frohman's production of The Dollar Princess at the Knickerbocker Theatre. Like most of the Frohman musical shows it was originally an English piece. Willner and Grunbaum wrote to the libretto and Leo Fall the music. George Grossmith, Jr., Americanized it. The theme of the comedy is that an American multi-millionaire has a hobby for hiring European noblemen in distress because he likes to see them at work around the house doing something useful. He likes to have his auto run by an English baron, his coffee poured by a French count, his horses groomed by a Spanish grandee, etc. It is needless to say that the employment of all of these foreign noblemen was facilitated by the hope of each to win the hand of the wealthy heiress on the principle that the coachman who frequently sees a lady often has a better chance to marry her than the fellow who never sees her at all. It is a pleasant and harmless conceit, and gives a good vehicle for the introduction of dances by Donald Brian, of Merry Widow fame, humor by E. J. Connolly and Will West, gowns by Valli Valli, and singing by Adrienne Augarde, recently the prima donna of an Irish opera across Broadway. On other occasions I have gone out of my way in reviewing Frohman productions at the Knickerbocker to commend William T. Francis, the musical director, for the manner in which he fully realizes that his orchestra, in singing numbers, is merely an accompaniment to the voice. Francis actually treats the voice of a singer as though it were entitled to be heard, and that is more than can be said for some of the other directors along the Great White Way. Some of them either don't know how loud they are playing or else seem to think that the people are paying $2 a seat to hear an orchestra. We pay $5 sometimes to hear a complete symphony orchestra. But when we go to hear comic opera we are looking for voices and mirth. How often have I seen excellent singers and good musical humor drowned out completely by the blare of a trombone. Then the manager wonders why the singer doesn't create an impression. Well, I just wish to say in closing, that one half of the success of The Dollar Princess is due to the careful manner in which Mr. Francis keeps down his orchestra so that the audience can hear the singers. Why, even Donald Brian's small but sympathetic tenor voice stood out to advantage under the careful nursing by this painstaking conductor. Usually I come away from a comic opera feeling like smashing the leader of the orchestra over the head with a bull fiddle, but I take off my hat to Billy Francis. ROB ROY.

Mack Swain will open his new company at his Santa Cruz theatre next Monday. Richard Claye and Reva Raymond will play the leads, and the other people will be Claude Hutcheson, Ben Reynolds, Floyd Menzel, Lillian Fischer and Norman Fusier.

Personals

MILTON SILLS, leading man for Blanche Bates, will be married at the end of the present season to Gladys Wynne, who played here last year in The Servant in the House.

JOSIE ROBINSON HAYWARD, of the Dreamland company, which has been laying off this week, was a DRAMATIC REVIEW caller. "Ma" has only one idea now and that is a California engagement. She is in love with the State.

WILLIAM VAUGHN MOODY, formerly of Chicago, author of The Great Divide and widely known as an educator and poet, is a patient in a hospital in Baltimore, suffering from an internal disorder, which probably will require an operation.

JOSEPH TOPLITZKY, who has been Manager H. C. Wyatt's office boy in Los Angeles for the past five years, has been promoted to assistant treasurer and secretary, and to celebrate his good fortune is now on a trip to San Francisco. His friends say that when he returns home it may be with a bride, a member of a well-known theatrical company.

MAYBELLE THOMPSON has signed to play leads for the George Howard stock in Vancouver, B. C.

In a fire which destroyed the Newport Hotel in Colgate, Okla., Nov. 2, Carl W. McRaven, a theatrical manager of Birmingham, Ala., was perhaps fatally burned. McRaven suffered his injuries in saving the life of a Miss Gerhardt. He was attracted by her screams while he was escaping. He returned to the burning hotel and carried her through the flames to the street. Then he fell unconscious.

FRANK OPPERMAN is visiting his friend, Larry Underwood at the latter's ranch in Lancaster, Southern California.

HARRY BLANCHARD, a member of the Willard Mack Company, of Salt Lake City, who died of apoplexy in the street some days ago, was buried there under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias. He was a member of Susquehanna Lodge No. 199. Through the good offices of Manager A. B. Jensen, of the Grand, himself a K. of P., the Salt Lake lodge undertook to stand the expenses of interment. Willard Mack provided a purse for Blanchard's wife, Eleanor Everett, that enabled her to return to Chicago, where she has relatives.

HENRI BERNSTEIN, the dramatist, and Francis Chevassu, a dramatic critic, fought a duel with pistols at Prince Park, near Paris, Oct. 27. Neither was wounded. M. Chevassu fired and missed, while Bernstein did not discharge his weapon. When he was asked later why he had not fired, the dramatist replied: "I forgot to." The duel grew out of the publication of an article written by Bernstein, in which he attacked the critic.

The divorce suit of Grave Van Studdiford against Charles Van Studdiford was heard last Monday in St. Louis in the St. Louis county circuit court. The case was taken under advisement. Mrs. Van Studdiford's testimony covered the single point of desertion charged in the petition, and its alleged refusal of Mrs. Van Studdiford to give her husband more money.

George Baker's New Theatre is Assured for Portland

PORTLAND, Nov. 8.—Announcement was made this week that Manager George L. Baker had closed arrangements whereby a new Baker Theatre would be erected on the northeast corner of Third and Main streets. The new location is three blocks south of the present Baker Theatre. The new house will be the home of the Baker stock company. Meanwhile work is progressing on the new Heilig Theatre, for which Blanche Bates broke ground some time since. These two houses together with the plans to build a new home for the Shubert attractions will make three new houses for Portland.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Calvin Heilig, mgr.; Wm. Pangle, res. mgr.)—Billie Burke in Love Watches proved to be one of the hits of the present season. Every performance was witnessed by packed houses, and the star was given an ovation at each performance. Last night Victor Moore opened in The Talk of New York to a big house. It is a long time since we have had a new Cohan play, and the people seemed to be hungry for it. The play is a continuation of the Kid Burns character in Forty Five Minutes from Broadway. Moore made a decided hit. Of course the chorus was up to the usual Cohanesque standard—that is, worked hard and fast. Coming—John Young in Lo.

BAKER THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—The Honeymoon Trail opened yesterday with a matinee and packed the house, and last night the same state of affairs was again in evidence. The comedy seemed to make a big hit with the audiences, and left every one in a jovial mood. Bert Baker is the star of the show, and he proved to be one of the best comedians that has come this way. He has a way about him that is peculiarly his own, and he does not have to resort to horse play to get a laugh. Louis Kelso is his chief support and he was very good. The chorus is large and good to look at. Next week—In Dreamland.

PORTLAND THEATRE (Russell & Drew, mgrs.; Frank Hood, res. mgr.)—For their second week at this house the Taylor company are offering The Queen of the Highway. It is one of those kinds of melodrama that one seems never to get tired of. H. Gittus Lownsdale played the leading role of the men naturally, and Grace Howard in the title role left nothing to be desired. This is the last week of the Taylor company, and commencing with the next attraction there will be no other bookings than the Shubert shows.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (James H. Errickson, mgr.)—One of Portland's old-time favorites is the headliner this week at the Orpheum—Edwin Stevens. Mr. Stevens and Miss Tina Marshall appear in characters from Dickens, and they are given with realism. The De Haven Sextette are also back with us again, and they again scored. The Musical Shetlands proved to be about one of the best animal acts that has come this way, while the wire work of the Carmen Troupe was original and entertaining. This week's bill includes John B. Hymer and company; Ben Welch; Duffin-Redcay Troupe; Patrice and company; Vittoria and Giorgetta; Chassino; and Hopkins Sisters.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—Packed houses at both performances yesterday greeted the comedy, Whose Baby Are You? The company got all the fun possible out of the play, and to those who have seen the play, they know what that means. Robert Athon was cast in the lead, and he and Miss Priscilla Knowles were right in their element. Several specialties were introduced that went big.

GRAND THEATRE (Frank Coffinberry, mgr.)—Harry and Kate Jackson are headliners; other acts are Rosedale Four; Norris and Morton; Mlle. Martha; Belle and Caron; Harry Thompson; and Fred Bauer.

PANTAGES THEATRE (John Johnson, mgr.)—This week's bill includes La Belle Italia Troupe; Edythe Stanley; Shayne and King; Bunchu and Alger; Leo White; The Lavalles; and Geo. Winfield and company. A. W. W.

as a part of a mission plan which the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions has been carrying on in St. Louis, Chicago, Buffalo and other cities. Packing cases and chorus girls' trunks were used as pulpits, and large audiences listened to short sermons by preachers who sought to "take the heathenism out of business and soften its hard lines."

Valencia Theatre

The last performances of Mr. Hamlet of Broadway, with Eddie Foy and the big musical comedy company, will be given this Saturday afternoon and evening and on Sunday night Dallas Welford, an English comedian, will make his first appearance in San Francisco in the international comedy success, Mr. Hopkinson, by R. C. Carton. Mr. Welford is said to have certain mannerisms that are his own particular possession and are indescribably funny, and many San Franciscans who have seen him in Mr. Hopkinson are positive in their assertions that the biggest laughing treat offered in this city in many a day is in store for our local amusement seekers. The company, which has been associated with the star during the long and successful run of Mr. Hopkinson in this country, jumps direct from New York, having left that city last Monday at noon. The Shuberts consider this attraction one of the very strongest in their list of theatric offerings. The only matinees will be on Saturday and Thanksgiving. Charles Cherry, in that beautiful comedy, The Bachelor, will follow Mr. Hopkinson at the Valencia Theatre.

The Orpheum

Edwin Stevens will appear next week in a comedietta entirely new to us, entitled A Busy Morning, which is said to be a capital vehicle for the full display of his ability and versatility. Mr. Stevens will impersonate Reginald Da Cape, a composer, and will be supported by that charming comedienne, Tina Marshall, who will have the role of Besie Dale, his ward. The De Haven Sextette, with Sydney C. Gibson featured in the dancing operetta, The Understudy, will be a welcome incident of the new program. Their stage setting is a pretty garden in which a fete is being held and the six sprightly dancers and Mr. Gibson frolic through the twenty minutes of the act with great variety of songs and dances. Howard's musical ponies and comedy canines will be seen in an act that is decidedly novel. Mr. Howard introduces four magnificent Shetland ponies and a dozen prize winning dogs. Milt Wood, The Dancer with the Chair, is expected to be a distinct hit. Alone on the stage with a chair for a partner he dances various old-fashioned regulation and many new steps in a manner that never fails to excite enthusiasm. Next week will be the last of Lulu McConnell and Grant Simpson, Bobby Pandur and Brother, The Tempest and Sunshine Trio, and that stirring military act, Our Boys in Blue, which is nightly being received with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of approval. A new series of motion pictures will terminate the performance.

Alcazar Theatre

The Man on the Box will be the next offering, commencing Monday evening. This comedy is well and favorably known to San Francisco, having served twice as a starring vehicle for Max Figman, and it never failed to draw a crowded audience, although the prices of admittance were exactly double those which will be charged during its run in the Alcazar. With John Ince, Evelyn Vaughan and all the other favorites in the cast, adequate acting is assured, and the staging will be fully up to Alcazar standard. Mr. Ince will have the title part, and Miss Vaughan will be seen as Betty Annesley, the girl with whom the hero is so madly in love that he masquerades as a coachman in order to be near her. The plot develops some of the most laughable incidents imaginable, interspersed with strong dramatic situations. In the title role Mr. Ince will have fulsome opportunity to display those effective comedy qualities of which he has given flashes in The Cowboy and the Lady, and all the other members of the company are happily cast.

Correspondence

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—The Idols, a drama in four acts and five scenes, being a dramatization of William J. Locke's novel of the same name by Roy Hornimann, was given its premier at the Bijou Theatre last week under the management of Walter N. Lawrence and scored with the audience. The scene of the third act, showing a murder trial in progress in the Assizes Court, London, was especially effective. For their work in this act the company received nine curtain calls. The piece is full of dramatic situations. It shows a woman sacrificing her honor to save a man who has at one time befriended her. Hugh Coleman has secretly married Minna Hart, daughter of a Jewish money lender. They quarrel and enter into a compact to renounce each other. The old money lender is killed by his drunken butler and young Coleman is accused of the crime. The evidence is all against him when Irene Mirriam takes the stand and testifies that Coleman was with her at the time the murder was committed. This proves an alibi and Coleman is acquitted. Mrs. Mirriam then has her husband to account to. The Mirriams are on the point of separating, when young Mrs. Coleman clears Mrs. Mirriam by confessing her marriage and the fact that her husband was in her company on the night in question. Leonore Harris played the part of the money lender's daughter, and the audience liked her work. Mabel Roebuck was Irene Mirriam; Orlando Daly played Hugh Coleman, and H. J. Carvill was Gerard Mirriam. Others in the cast are Alexander F. Frank, Harold Mead, Helen Orr Daly, Joseph K. Whitmore, S. F. Klawans, Augustus Inglis, John Prescott, William Morran, Imogene Coleman, Blanche Weaver and Sheldon Lewis. * * * Bert Williams, the colored comedian, is again at the Majestic Theatre, without his old associate, Walker, but with one of their characteristic musical pieces. Mr. Lode of Koal is made from much the same material as its predecessors and has the same qualities. There is something of a plot, plenty of dancing and negro singing and a good part for Williams himself. Instead of being the easy credulous darky with a hard luck story, as in most of the other pieces, Williams is a stranger from the Isle of Koal who takes the place of a kidnapped king. The situations that might naturally fall to the part in musical comedy are his and he makes so much of them that he came near to being the whole show. He had a pleasing song in the second act and several amusing monologues and some quaint dances in the course of the piece. The company was large, comprising some good dancers and singers, and the piece, well mounted and staged, moved so well that it proved about the best the comedian's management has ever offered New York. * * * Mlle. Adeline Genée, the little Danish dancer who convinced every one who saw her when she first appeared here two years ago that ballet dancing is not one of the lost arts, returned in a new play at the New Amsterdam Theatre last Monday and demonstrated again that as an exponent of the poetry of motion she is in a class by herself. There used to be a theory that our fathers and grandfathers applauded the only great ballerinas, but there wasn't a person in last night's audience who wouldn't be willing to declare such an assertion a myth and a fable. Genée charmed again, as she did when she first came here. She danced until she must have been tired with the same grace and ease that have captivated her audiences in the past, and only appreciation of the physical exertion involved prevented those who saw her from demanding more encores. Genée is the feature of an entertainment called The Silver Star, put together by Harry B. Smith with the assistance of a dozen or so writers of music. It is neither comic opera nor musical comedy. To classify it properly one must go back to the old phrase "musical extravaganza," which seems to have gone out of date, for it is a combination of spectacle, showy chorus work, music, specialties by a pair of low comedy actors, popular songs and what not. All this is obviously merely a setting in which Genée may appear, and although there may be some who say that it is not of the highest intellectual type of entertainment, nevertheless it served well its purpose of keeping things going in the interval when the dancer was recovering her breath. What little story there is consumes only a few moments of the beginning of the first and the end of the last acts, but in the meantime there is plenty of amusement of various kinds. Genée this time has a speaking part, but her lines are not many. Her five dances contribute more than her share. The first of these came as part of a pretty Christmas tree scene, which will add to the popularity of the piece during the holiday season. It was a fairy dance, and in it she was as dainty, airy and spritlike as one could wish a fairy to be. Next came a march militaire, in which the steps brought out the swing of the soldier, and then a hornpipe with Genée as a most attractive little sailor. The second act brought a ballet of the wines, in which a gorgeously dressed chorus assisted in making an unusually pretty picture. In this Genée gave her idea of the rollicking spirit of champagne and included some feats of toe and ankle dancing that seemed little short of marvellous as a physical accomplishment. In this and in her Springtime dance in the last act she was surrounded by a corps of young girls trained by Alexander Genée, maitre de ballet of the Royal Opera House of St. Petersburg. It would be hard to decide which of the offerings was most appreciated. All were most enthusiastically received. Even without the dancing star the play would probably be a popular entertainment. Bickel and Watson are responsible for a lot of foolery which reminded one in many ways of Weber and Fields. It was rough at times, but amusing. Nellie McCoy sang two songs of a popular nature and won a lot of applause by her clever and graceful dancing. Emma Janvier, too, had a couple of numbers which she half talked, half sang in the same knowing way as ever, and Barney Bernard and Lee Harrison rounded out the list of principals, all of whom were warmly greeted by the audience, which appeared to have constituted itself into a Welcome to Our City Association. The production is elaborately staged and a large, good looking and handsomely costumed chorus made several stage pictures decidedly out of the ordinary. It was a great night for everybody except Genée. For her it was a triumph. * * * Charles Frohman has the assurance from Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, the English playwright, that he will come to America in time for the first dress rehearsal by Ethel Barrymore and her company of the play Mid-Channel. Sir Arthur volunteers to render whatever assistance he can in the details of the production and promises to remain in America and to be present at the first New York performance of the play. While there will be one or two Englishmen in Miss Barrymore's company for Mid-Channel, the majority of the cast will be Americans. * * * John Drew, who was to have produced a new W. Somerset Maugham comedy this season, has made arrangements for an indefinite postponement of the new production so as to continue playing Inconstant George. * * * A large audience was present at the Taylor Opera House, Trenton, last week to witness the first performance of Seven Days, a new comedy by Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood, produced under direction of Wagenhals & Kemper. The play is in three acts, all of which are laid in a Riverside Drive mansion in New York City. Prominent in the company are Hope Latham, Florence Reed, Georgia O'Ramey, Lucille La Verne, Herbert Corthell, Allan Pollock, Carl Eckstrom, Jay Wilson, Wm. Eville and F. C. Butler. The play will be given its metropolitan production at the Astor Theatre on Wednesday evening, November 10. * * * Percy G. Williams' new Bronx vaudeville theatre opened last Monday night with ceremony and enthusiasm. The lobby and aisles of the new playhouse were lined with floral pieces, sent by the friends of the manager and by the employees of Mr. Williams' other theatres.

Death came to Mrs. Louise Allen Collier, wife of "Willie" Collier, at her home, 162 West Ninety-sixth street, New York, on last Wednesday. Her death was sudden, none of her friends expecting it. Louise Allen Collier was well known to the stage. She was born in San Francisco, and had a host of friends here and in other cities of California. In 1885 she began her theatrical career at Niblo's Garden, New York, playing the role of Bessie in "Around the World in Eighty Days." She later appeared in many successful plays, and, with her husband, formed part of the late Weber-Fields Company. The last appearance of Mr. Collier and his wife together on the stage was in 1905, when Mr. Collier was the star of "The Dictator." Since then Mrs. Collier appeared with the Lew Fields Company in "About Town" and then entered vaudeville.

The Passing of William Gleason

At a private hospital in Fruitvale, California, William Lawrence Gleason, a character comedian of thirty-five years' experience, passed away on October 19th, twenty hours after a most delicate and dangerous operation. Mr. Gleason had suffered from a serious intestinal trouble for nearly a year and since May had been very ill. A member of the Baker stock company, Portland, Oregon, since August, 1906, he made his last appearance on any stage at the Bungalow Theatre there on June 6th, as Sonora Slim in The Girl of the Golden West. Unable to appear at night his son went on for the part. In spite of his illness he had studied and rehearsed the part of Mr. Pipp in The Education of Mr. Pipp, and acted it at every performance during the week of May 23d and as the part fitted his personality, he made a marked impression in it. Mr. Gleason was born in Neenah, County Tipperary, Ireland, April 26, 1850, being 59 years and 6 months of age at the time of his death. He came to this country with his parents while an infant, and lived in Cincinnati, Ohio. As a boy of 12 he followed the Tenth Ohio, Col. Lytle's regiment, to the front, his elder brothers being in the regiment. He was permitted to remain, and later became a teamster, being in several battles, Stone River among others. He "suped" at the Pike Opera House in 1866 and afterwards made his first appearance with the McCauley stock company and received most of his early training in the stock companies of Cincinnati, Louisville and St. Louis, supporting all the prominent stars of that period. In 1880 he married Mina Crolus. In 1881 he was with the Wallack company at Thirteenth and Broadway, but left there to manage his own company in partnership with J. E. Nugent. This partnership continued for five years. He was afterwards with Wm. Gillette, Charles Frohman and Jacob Lilt. In 1894 he came to San Francisco as stage director for the Morosco stock company at the Grand Opera House. Since that time he has been almost entirely on the Pacific Coast. He was stage director for the Bishop stock company, Majestic Theatre, San Francisco, Liberty Theatre in Oakland, season 1904-05. After the earthquake he joined the Baker stock company in Portland, Oregon, where he continued as leading character comedian until his death, and was greatly loved as well as admired by the patrons of the stock house to whom he was affectionately known as "Daddy," and will be remembered by his performances of David Harum, Emil Hoochstuhl in All On Account of Eliza, Nick Van Alstyne in The Henrietta, and the old Coxswain in The Ensign. He leaves a widow, Mina Crolus Gleason, one son, James, and a grandson, an infant, young James Jr. His remains were cremated at the Mountain View Cemetery, Oakland, October 22d. Father Gee of St. John's Episcopal church reading the burial service. The pall bearers were Eugene Eberle, Manager H. W. Bishop, Captain Henry Gleason, Edward Beardsley, Frank Prussia and Fred Cooper. There were a number of floral remembrances from near friends and a large bunch of wheat and autumn leaves from the Liberty Playhouse company, and an envelope containing a hundred dollar note to the widow with the love and sympathy of the management and entire company and orchestra.

Carter de Haven a Warm Baby

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—If the steps which will be taken in the Flora-Parker-Carter de Haven matrimonial mix-up are as enlivening as those which have already graced the incident, Broadway will probably be provided with a fresh supply of interesting gossip. So far doors leading to rooms in two prominent hotels were smashed in, the head of William Grossman, a lawyer, was cut open with an axe and his shoulder was dislocated; two detectives were arrested and haled to court, and de Haven, an actor, was arrested and released on $2,000 bail, all because of strife in the domestic life of de Haven and his wife, Miss Parker, member of a company playing in Broadway. Miss Parker has been living in the Cumberland Hotel, Fifty-fourth street and Broadway, while her husband has been occupying rooms on the ninth floor of the Hotel Bayard, in Forty-seventh street. At the instigation of Miss Parker, two private detectives took rooms on the ninth floor at the Bayard. Acting under instructions, they telephoned Miss Parker at the Cumberland and at 1:30 o'clock in the morning she hurried to the Bayard accompanied by a friend. After a hasty consultation with the detectives she went to her husband's room, and asked admittance. This, it is said, was refused, and at her order the detectives beat down the door. She confronted her husband and there was a stormy scene, after which she returned to her hotel.

Spotlights

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—Half a dozen perplexed and helpless deputy sheriffs, an angry woman with a claim for $3,000, a badly perturbed diva and a thrilling escape in an automobile provided plenty of melodramatic atmosphere for Mme. Olive Fremstad's recital at the Auditorium this afternoon. The immediate cause was Mrs. Clara Bowen Shepard of Milwaukee, who had come to Chicago and enlisted a force of deputy sheriffs to serve Mme. Fremstad with papers in a breach of contract case, the singer having failed, it was alleged, to fill an engagement in Milwaukee last Thursday. Late in the afternoon deputy sheriffs were distributed at various points about the theatre to watch for Mme. Fremstad's exit. Meanwhile, unknown to the watchers, the diva's baggage had been piled into an automobile and sent to the La Salle street station, and another machine with a heavily curtained limousine was awaiting at the Auditorium Hotel entrance, and in this she escaped.

The question of breaking the will of Mrs. Vannie F. Allen of Malden, Mass., and the re-apportionment of property valued at $150,000, among several relatives, including Mme. Lillian Nordica, the opera singer, was taken under advisement today by Judge Dugg of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts last week. Mme. Nordica, who is one of the contestants of her aunt's will, testified that she had virtually been promised a portion of her aunt's estate by the latter several years before her death. Mrs. Allen gave most of her property to charity, and her lawyer who drew the will testified that Mrs. Allen stated that she did not mention her nieces as she believed they were sufficiently well off. Mrs. Imogen Castillo, of No. 1575 West Twenty-second street, Los Angeles, is one of the contestants in the Allen contest. Mrs. Castillo is a sister of Mme. Nordica and was a niece of Mrs. Allen.

Laura Hudson, supported by an excellent company, presented "Three Weeks" at the Plato theatre on Tuesday evening to a fair-sized audience. The company was undoubtedly the best that has visited Modesto for several years and repeated the hit made by the same actors in "The Devil" last season. The leading roles, Paul and Mme. Zalenska, were in the hands of Godfrey Matthews and Miss Hudson, and both showed themselves to be possessed of talent of the highest quality. Miss Hudson is handsome, as well as talented, and in the famous

"tiger skin" scene in the second act her emotional work far surpassed any acting ever seen on the local stage. Mr. Matthews also rose to the opportunities presented in this act to the fullest extent. Another actor whose work was above the ordinary is Louis Lytton, whose Dmitry, the faithful adherent of Mme. Zalenska, was a fine piece of acting. The same can be said of Griffith Wray, in the part of the dissolute king. This part, although small, requires finished acting and Mr. Wray fulfilled every requirement.—Modesto Herald.

Wm. H. Crane has started west on his Pacific Coast tour, the first he has arranged for that territory in several seasons. He is playing in the comedy triumph, Father and the Boys.

Los Angeles is Looking Forward to Interesting Rivalry Between Eddie Foy and George Cohan

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 11.—Last week we had the bankers' show at the Mason and the T. M. A. benefit at the Auditorium. This week we have the hospital benefit, Professor Napoleon, at the Auditorium also. This is one of the events of the season and has been in preparation for some time. There will be five performances given. This week marks the fifth anniversary of the organization of the Burbank stock company. The four members of the present company who were also members of the original are John W. Burton, H. S. Duffield, Henry Stockbridge and Willis Marks. What is an "electrical masquerade ball?" Well, at any rate that is what the Theatrical Treasurers' Association is planning to hold. We are sure it will be fine and we are waiting to discover just what kind of a ball it is to be. No date has yet been set for this wonderful affair. Two big counter attractions are scheduled for next week. The Shuberts will present Eddie Foy in Mr. Hamlet of Broadway, and the syndicate house will offer The Man of the Hour. For the first time in Los Angeles, Ferris Hartman and company will next week present The Toreador. On Friday afternoon Bruce Gordon Kingsley, assisted by Harry Girard, will give the first of his series of educational organ recitals at the Auditorium. Monday night Ellen Beach Yaw appeared in a farewell concert at the Auditorium, prior to her departure for the East on a concert tour. Once again the old People's Theatre on Main street has changed its name. The new lessees, Messrs. Alphin and Farge, will call it the Olympic, and will give musical shows there, commencing next Monday afternoon. Miss Marta Golden, formerly with the Princess company, is spending the winter here. De Witt Jennings, a former member of the Belasco company, is now playing with Kyrle Bellew in New York. Max Bloom is playing in The Sunny Side of Broadway at Salt Lake.

AUDITORIUM—The Theatre Beautiful is dark for the first half of the week. Wednesday night Professor Napoleon opened. This musical extravaganza is given for the benefit of the Children's Hospital by students at the various educational institutions. It is a really big production and excellently done. Roland Paul, Harry Girard and Agnes Caine Brown are all in the cast. There are tennis girls, rowing girls, little girls, and in fact all kinds of girls as well as all kinds of boys, too. There is an enormous cast, but the drilling has been so well done that there is not a flaw in the performance. There is no plot to the piece, but it is made to go by the song numbers. These follow one another in rapid succession with mere dashes of dialogue between. The success of the performance surely must be very gratifying to the management. It is long but never drags for a minute of the two acts, and the interest is kept up from the start to the finish.

BELASCO—Channing Pollock's charming play of Washington life, The Little Grey Lady, is demanding the attention of the Belasco players this week. This is not a great play but it is a pretty one and is well done by the producing company. It is a story of a part of department life of which we hear and know little. The play has no hero. The heroine, Anna Gray, is in love with one Perrito Carlyle, who in turn imagines himself in love with Ruth Jordan. They are all clerks in the redemption bureau of the Treasury Department. Carlyle steals a marked bill in order to give his sweetheart some pleasures which she wants. The efforts of Anna Gray to save him from the consequences of his folly, and the attitude of his sweetheart, Ruth Jordan, make a man of him. Miss Magrane plays Anna Gray, and Frank Camp is well cast as Carlyle. Lewis S. Stone plays Samuel Meade, the secret service agent, who is in love with Anna Gray. Mr. Stone does his usual fine work in the part and makes of it just what the author intended it to be. Good work is done by Mr. Scott, Mr. Vivian, Mr. Giblyn, Miss Lewis, Miss Farrington and Miss Taylor, not forgetting the small boy of Peter Clancy. The stage settings are appropriate and the performance satisfactory.

BURBANK—That old but always popular farce, Charley's Aunt, is the offering at the Burbank for the week. This piece has been produced so many times that every one knows the story by heart and it needs no repeating. Henry Stockbridge as Lord Fancourt Babberly is too funny for words. The part fits him admirably. Good work is done by Mr. Beasley and Mr. Mes-tayer as undergraduates of St. Olde's, Oxford, and also by Miss Hall and Miss Lovell Alice Taylor. Miss Royce is the real aunt and Miss Duffet is cast as Ella Dellahay. The whole is a very pleasing revival of an old favorite.

MASON—There is "nothing doing" at the Wyatt playhouse this week, but next week it will again open its doors for The Man of the Hour.

MAJESTIC—The Land of Nod, which opened, the, then new, Majestic about a year ago, returns for another visit and is fully as enjoyable as it was formerly. This is one of those dainty fanciful things, bringing an equipment of scenery, costumes and electrical effects, that make it a series of beautiful pictures. The comedy is bright and the music is of the popular order, and the company one of the largest ever seen here. Neil McNeil, Anna McNabb and George Fox return to the cast this year, and their familiarity with their parts help to make a very smooth performance. The prima donna is Bessie Merrill, late of The Motor Girl.

GRAND—Ferris Hartman and his company are giving us a very fine presentation of The Mayor of Tokio. "Kidder" is one of the best of the Hartman parts and furnishes ample opportunity for the Hartman humor. Miss Islieb has a better chance to do her best than in any other piece the company has put on. Her duet with Mr. Walsh is particularly fine. The Ivan Orfullitch of Walter Catlett is very funny. Josie Hart is pleasing as Betsy Lincoln. Joseph Fogarty is Kow Tow, the Mayor of Tokio. Eva Vance, a recent addition to the company, plays the character part of Madame Stitch, the wardrobe mistress and ex-ballet dancer. The piece is well staged and costumed.

ORPHEUM—Valerie Bergere, who is reckoned as one of the best in her particular line, and who always brings us something good, leads the bill this week in The Sultan's Favorite. This sketch gives an opportunity for lavish scenery, which Miss Bergere has provided, and also, her support is excellent. The Tuscany Troubadours, six in number, give us a high-class rendition of grand opera numbers in a novel manner, in that they have an act with a plot, which gives an excuse for each and every song. The Glinerratis, also six, are superb in the acrobatic line, and give their stunts before the new wooden back drop, which the management has just provided. Carlin and Clark are German comedians, who are pleasing the audience. James Young and his clever company remain another week, as does Mary Norman in some new characterizations: Pulu and his master; and Ed. F. Reynard's miniature city.

LOS ANGELES—The feature of the bill at the Los Angeles theatre this week is the making of real ice before the audience at every performance, and the fancy skating of Isabel Butler and Edward Bassett. Skating on ice in California is truly something of a novelty to say the very least. The four Stagpoles are Australian acrobatic comedians, their work is clever. George Lauder is also an Australian and a very fine ventriloquist. Rial and Marion have a sketch entitled The Witch's Power. Ernest Brinkman in character sketches, and Jeanette Gravini and William Selbini in a novelty act of posing and athletics with new motion pictures complete the bill.

FISCHER'S—Oh, You Kid is the title of the one-act comedy offering of the Kelly Lyric Comedy company for the week. James Kelly appears to advantage in a comedy part and Miss Massey plays the part of an old maid. Charles Figg is the leading man of the company and pleases with his singing. Miss Deglow Clark, the leading woman, is a favorite already. Harry Oakes and Annie Robinson play the parts of the servants to perfection. There is a chorus of eight girls who are good looking and sing and dance well. E. P. Foot, formerly with Murray and Mack, is the director. This is the first week of the Kelly company at Fischer's, but we hope it is only the start of the good things we are to see at this popular little theatre.

UNIQUE—The vaudeville part of the program at the Unique is furnished by a troupe of ten performing baboons, trained by one C. I. Norris, and Leo St. Elmo, a musician, who can play well a number of different instruments. The Unique players are seen in a comedy called The Irish Alderman. Al Franks plays the title role and he with Miss Latrel Atkins as an assistant, calls forth the most of the laughs. James Spencer is the villain, and Hazel Salmon the adventuress. Miss DeLane, Miss Baumann and Herbert Cramer all have good parts. The usual illustrated song and new motion pictures complete the bill.

WALKER—A very good vaudeville bill succeeds the Allen Cui company at the Walker Theatre.

FLORNE EMERY.

SAN DIEGO, Nov. 12.—The talk of the town is the success of the Chas. King stock at the Pickwick Theatre. It is within the bounds of truth to say that a thousand people are turned away each week. This week Mr. King is offering A Bachelor's Romance, and one of the finest performances ever seen here is being enjoyed by large audiences. Mr. King is playing David Holmes, and his characterization is a gem of quiet, artistic depiction. Marjorie Rambeau, the beautiful featured member of the company, is a winning ward of the crusty old bachelor, and Pietro Sosso as Martin, and Louis Morrison as Mulberry, furnish beautiful character studies. Lillian Burnett is extremely good in the character part, and proves herself a most intelligent and pleasing actress. J. Franklyn McDonald as the younger brother, and Frank Bonner and Ernest Van Pelt as the two newspaper boys, give faithful portrayals. Auda Due was, as usual, beautifully gowned, and her acting of the widowed sister was artistically presented. Next week, The Squawman. At the Queen, Manager Donnellan is packing 'em in. He has become a popular and successful factor in our amusement life. Manager Jack Dodge of the Garrick is resting for a few days. His first show will be The Land of Nod next week.

New Orpheum for Seattle

The next theatre to be erected in Seattle will be the permanent Orpheum, to be built by John W. Con-sidine the coming summer. The new playhouse will in every way equal the beautiful Majestic, opened last August. The Orpheum will cost $300,000.

Spotlights

OWING to poor business, Commencement Days closed in St. Paul, Nov. 5. Nick Turner, who has been ahead of the show will arrive in San Francisco next week.

The revised list of Mark Twain's new company shows Richard Claye, Reva Raymond, Vera Hamilton, Susie Howard, Ben Reynolds, Claude Hutcheson, Floyd Menzel, Norman Fusier and possibly Art Witting, director.

The "Soul Kiss," which comes to the Garrick soon, is described as a riot of colors. The book is witty and up-to-date, the music bright and tuneful, and the cast is a big one.

Wright Lorimer is surrounded by a powerful supporting company on this tour of his successful "Shepherd King." Included in it are Brigham Royce, Irving White, Daniel Gil-fether, Frank Campbelle, Harold La Coste, Ernest Roseman, Dan Lawler, Walt Brown, Helen Singer, Fredericka Going, Allison Skipworth, Ruth Copley and Ioah Ferrier.

Correspondence

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—The whimsical humor and the drollery of F. M. Barrie are always delightful, and into the comedy What Every Woman Knows, which he wrote for Maude Adams and which she illuminated at the Broad-street Theatre this week with the light of her winsome personality, he has written some of the best of his polished wit and adroit character study. Hattie Williams, a transfer from the field of musical comedy to that of comedy drama, as the programme describes the piece in which she appeared at the Garrick. Eugene N. Presbrey's dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, The Right of Way, attracted a large audience at the Walnut this week. The management provided two excellent actors in the persons of P. Aug. Anderson and Hallett Thompson. The delights of that dainty musical comedy of English origin, The Belle of Brittany, proving most gratifying to visitors to the Adelphia. Frank Daniels is at his best in the drolleries of the role of a Brittany marquis. The Professor's Love Story, played successfully by E. O. Willard, was given by the Orpheum company at the Chestnut-street Theatre. What lifts The Queen of the Moulin Rouge far above the level of ordinary musical comedy is the pantomime L'Amour de l'Apache, a feature greatly elaborated since the play was given here last season. CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 31.—Tulane Theatre—David Warfield in his celebrated play of The Music Master turned hundreds away from each performance and exhausting the city ordinance's limitation as to standing room. The piece is a classic, running the gamut of tears and laughter and revealing the highest artistry of the star. The work of two members of the company stands out conspicuously brilliant, namely, that of Maria Bates and Janet Dunbar. The former is very effective in a character part that is most congenial. Miss Dunbar's naturalness and intelligence will always win her the plaudits of the critics. The balance of the cast is strong and the whole production sumptuously mounted. Nov. 1—Olga Nethersole in repertoire. Nov. 8—The Servant in the House. Crescent Theatre—Al. G. Fields and his merry minstrel band have entertained large audiences during the week. No actor visiting here has more friends than Brother Field. The show numbers several good singers and dancers, of whom the principals are John Healy, Joe McGee, Frank Hughes and Chas. Reinhart. Of course, Al Fields and Doc. Quigley are as clever and funny as ever. The production was handsomely staged and costumed. Next—The Man of the Hour. 8—Thurston, the magician. Tulane Theatre, Nov. 4—Theatrical interest is stimulated this week by the fact that America's greatest emotional actress, Olga Nethersole, is presenting her famous repertoire of Sapho, The Writing on the Wall, Camille, and The Second Mrs. Tanqueray. Of course packed houses have been the rule. Interest chiefly centers in her new play, The Writing on the Wall, principally because it shows the star in a character unlike and dramatically opposite to which we have been accustomed. The play deals with the tenement house problems which the wife of Irving Lawrence, a rich owner of the properties and from which he derives large rentals, has given her charitable soul to alleviate. She is handicapped by the baseness of her lord, who finds in their income sufficient to enable him to prove recreant to his trust as a landlord as well as false to his wife. His undoing comes when his own son is burned alive while attending a Christmas celebration. Barbara Lawrence (Miss Nethersole), the wife, struggled for the sake and memory of her child to live down her husband's perfidy and right here comes as grand an exhibition of realism as the Tulane stage has ever seen. The applause was deafening and so great was the actress' gratification that in a curtain call with outstretched arms all she could say was, "I am so happy that you like my new play." The fact that it is staged under the personal supervision of Miss Nethersole is an earnest of its faultlessness and magnificence. Her leading man, Harrison Hunter, whom, I understand, is a 'Frisco boy, was artistically effective with a fine stage presence and good voice. Albert Perry was also intelligent and natural. I should like to have seen Charlotte Tittell in a part with more opportunities. We know her abilities and were waiting to acclaim them further. Mr. Hamilton and Jas. B. Ross are entitled to extended praise. Miss Nethersole's tour is under the direction of Wallace Munro, who is piloting her to the Coast. Next week—The Servant in the House. Crescent Theatre—The Man of the Hour is being creditably presented with Thomas Chatterton and Felice Davenport in the leads. This is its first appearance at popular prices and of course large audiences will prevail. The cast is thoroughly adequate. Next week—Thurston, the magician.

W. L. MCCONNELL.

CARSON CITY, Nev., Nov. 10.—Lake Theatre, Murray & Hayes, props.—Fine line of moving pictures every night, with changes three times a week. Harry Ford, late of the National, buck and wing dancer and vocalist. Popular prices. Mint Theatre—Herr von Engel, prop.—This week the celebrated Del Costa Duo in operatic and other selections. Good pictures. S. R. O. every night. Occasionally Herr von Engel, who was a pupil of the renowned Sandow, consents to give exhibitions of his marvelous strength. Carson Opera House, C. H. Peters, mgr.—In Valley Forge, Nov. 19. A. H. M.

EL PASO, Tex., Nov. 8.—Crawford Theatre (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—North Bros. Stock Company are playing to big business and pleasing. El Paso Theatre (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—The Girl Question, Nov. 12-13. The Majestic (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—The Majestic company to fairly good business for week ending Nov. 6. The El Paso fair closed Nov. 7 after a very successful week. The Nat Reiss Carnival Company furnished the attractions for the pike and gave good satisfaction. Frank Morton, the well known light comedian, has closed his engagement at the Majestic. He goes direct to the Coast to complete his arrangements for his tour next season in The Kid From Chicago.

GEO. A. MANSFIELD.

SAN BERNARDINO, Nov. 10.—At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, mgr.)—Nov. 5, The Girl Question showed to a good house. The performance was up to the average of the musical comedy, but nothing specially noteworthy; 11, The Man of the Hour; 18, Land of Nod; Dec. 4, Lo, with John E. Young in the cast, who is a special favorite here. J. E. RICH.

LONG BEACH, Nov. 10.—Bentley Grand Theatre, L. H. Bentley, owner—The Girton Stock Company is this week playing comedy and are all seen to excellent advantage. Ina Shepard, the popular leading woman, proves herself a fine comedian. Miss Gertrude Claire, the new character woman, is very good. Messrs. Scott, Morris Bauman, MacQuarrie and Chapman are all well cast. This company has more than made good here. Business good. Byde Wyle has changed hands. The reports are it will reopen in a week by J. Wheaton Leonard and Fred Osbourne. Theatatorium—Moving pictures and specialties to excellent business. Pastime Theatre—This theatre was partially burned last week. The fire started at the entrance door. Art Theatre—Moving pictures to good business.

CHICO, Nov. 10.—The Third Degree great hit here November 9; In Dreamland showed to small house 10; Johnson-Ketchel fight pictures 11; Sousa matinee 12.

SPOKANE, Nov. 11.—Blanche Bates in The Fighting Hope closed a successful three nights' engagement at the Auditorium, 1-3. John Cort's production of King Dodo three nights and Saturday matinee played to good houses; Human Hearts to a fair house; Billie Burk in Love Watches to a capacity advance sale; 14 week, The Climax. At the Spokane In Wyoming played to good houses week of 1-6; Forty-five Minutes From Broadway opened to a packed house; Elizabeth Drew as Mary made a big hit. The chorus sings well. Next week A Girl at the Helm. The Orpheum presents a good bill, with Florence Bindley in An Afternoon at Home headliner; Eva Taylor and her players in a picturesque comedy novelty, Dreamona; Stella H. Morrisini and her wonderful leaping Siberian wolf hounds; John Birch, the man with the hats; The Four Floods; Rosa Roma; Myers; Rosa; Orpheum pictures. One of the best bills of the season opens at the Washington. Myrtle Byrnes & Co. in a decidedly clever sharpshooting act; Nick Long, Idalene Cotton, presenting Ullie Akerstrom's playlet, The Banker, the Thief; Joe Whitehead; Flo Grierson in clever dances and melodies; the Three Keltons in a dancing musical act; Les Jundts, European novelty equilibrists; Jimmy Wall, minstrel humorist; motion pictures. The feature on the bill at Pantages is Otto Fiechtl's Tyrolean Sextette of Alpine Yodlers, and singers in their native costumes; the Three Lucifers, singers and dancers; Fisher-Burkhart comedy singers; William D. son, illustrated singer; Silvern-Emerie, trapeze-Roman rings; Crenyon, ventriloquist; pictures. The Unique Theatre, under the management of Harry W. Smith, has a good vaudeville bill, which includes the following: Horne's comedy dogs; Three Ward Sisters Miss Orma Orton, Kathrene Meiner and moving pictures. SMYTH.

TACOMA, Nov. 6.—After a lapse of several seasons Blanche Bates appeared at the Tacoma Theatre October 25-26 in her latest offering, The Fighting Hope. The play with its splendid Belasco setting was well received here by theatregoers. Miss Bates scored a personal triumph and John W. Cope was particularly good in a well acted character sketch. Oct. 27, Mme. Jomelli was the first attraction in the artist's course and gave a highly enjoyable recital to a large and fashionable audience. Oct. 29-30 Victor Moore and a large company in The Talk of New York pleased the lovers of Cohan musical shows. The play was lively, nicely staged and well patronized. Nov. 3, Billie Burke was greeted by a fashionable audience that taxed the capacity of the theatre. "The play's the thing" did not hold good in this case, as Miss Burke overshadows play and players. Of the supporting company Ernest Lowford deserves special mention. Nov. 10-11, King Dodo; 14-15, The Honeymoon Trail. B. B. Vincent, so long the singer of illustrated songs at the Pantages Theatre, has opened a vaudeville house in Puyallup, a small town nine miles from Tacoma. His place at the Pantages has been taken by J. Russell Powell. At the Pantages the last week in October animal acts carried off the honors. Mme. Florina with her leopards and pumas had a thrilling act and Seymour's trick dogs, five in number, were unusually well trained. At the Grand the same week a troupe of acrobats styled the Eight Kitabanzai Japs did some clever stunts, and a comedy, The Battle of Bay Rum, was really funny. This week the Grand's bill was mostly comedy. Harry Thompson scoring with stories and imitations. Mlle. Martha had an interesting aerial act. Rosamond Caron danced well and the Rosedale Four sang acceptably. At the Pantages the Lavolas had a fine slack wire act. The La Belle Italia troupe had an elaborate musical act. Shayne and King, Yiddish comedians, real funmakers, scored a hit here. Bunchu and Alger and Edythe Stanley appeared in singing acts. Robert Webb Lawrence and Philip Sheffield, prominent members of the McRae company here last season, opened in a vaudeville sketch last week, making their first appearance in Everett.

Correspondence

ST. PAUL, Minn., November 9.—“Commencement Days,” featuring Frederick V. Bowers, who's only bid for fame is good clothes and a fair baritone voice, came and pleased 7-10, while that prince of comedians, Henry E. Dixey, in Mary Jones' Pa packed the Metropolitan. James K. Hackett in Sampson and Billie Burke in Love Watches come during the month. Jolly Rose Melville in the everlasting Sis Hopkins made her annual appearance at the Grand to excellent business. Dazey's new comedy drama, My Partner's Girl, comes next. The great Albini is in town this week and St. Paul is jumping sideways. “Al” always stirs things up when he's around, and in consequence the Majestic is having their banner week. The St. Paul Orpheum with a poor show headed by The Bathing Girls, a big senseless act, had an ordinary week the 7th. Business at the Princess, Minneapolis, is rapidly improving. Jim Neil and his excellent company are becoming great favorites. The new Schubert theatre, St. Paul, is announced for Jan. 1, 1910, opening, but it will be spring before the box office commences to do business. The Gaiety, a new Minneapolis burlesque house, opened the 7th. It is on the Eastern wheel. The Lyric (Schubert's) just got through a bad week of Three Weeks. It will take twenty-one days for the good people of the Flour City to recover the shock. Ezra Kendall and Dustin Farnum follow. So long. AL. G. FLOURNOY.

NAPA, Nov. 10.—Napa Opera House (E. F. Hogan, mgr.)—The Elleford company opened the season Monday evening with The American Girl. Tuesday evening The Flag of Truce. This (Wednesday) afternoon Cinderella was played for the children and tonight Beacon Lights closes their engagement here. Despite the stormy weather, large houses have enjoyed the work of this ever popular company. The special agent of the Bureau of Labor Statistics came here today to stop the Osborne children from performing, because they are under age, but he found himself badly up against it, for the manager had secured a permit from the mayor, he acting as other city officials in other towns have done, claiming these children are learning a life profession and are in no way harmed by taking part in the plays. The Hayes, with moving pictures and vaudeville Friday, Saturday and Sunday evening, and the Novelty with moving pictures and continuous vaudeville, are both showing to good business, many nights the S. R. O. sign appearing in the lobby.

S. M. KYSER.

SEATTLE, Nov. 8.—MOORE—The Sunday concerts of the Seattle Symphony orchestra are gaining in popularity and yesterday's audience was immediately captivated by the splendid program given by Mr. Hadley and his organization. Last night at the Moore The Shepherd King opened a week's engagement. Wright Lorimer, who is the author of the play and also has the leading role, has woven a powerfully romantic drama around the biblical character of King David. He gives an excellent portrayal of this interesting figure, and the production is sufficiently spectacular to rank with Ben-Hur. ALHAMBRA—The engagement of George Fawcett and his company, who have been presenting The Great John Ganton, has been extended for another week, the bill, however, being changed to Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Mr. Fawcett in the part of Stevenson's famous scientist is unusual and striking, while the other members of the company give him good support.

GRAND—Emma Bunting was welcomed back last night to Seattle by all her old friends who used to crowd the Seattle theatre when she was appearing there in stock a short while ago. Everybody was glad to see her again and fully enjoyed the show. She has a week's engagement at the Grand in Lena Rivers, which was her farewell offering just prior to going on the road. SEATTLE—A thrilling melodrama of western life is Owen Davis' vivid play, The Gambler of the West, which played to the largest matinee of the season yesterday. Gun-play and poker games furnish plenty of excitement. LOIS—No doubt this will be the banner week of the D. S. Lawrence Stock Co.'s engagement at the Lois. The advance sales have been enormous and all for the reason that the week's bill is Zaza. The production is a good one and Jane Kelton is to be congratulated on her excellent playing in the role of Zaza. MAJESTIC—Sidney Deane and his company in Christmas on Blackwell's Island is one of the great big features on the bill. It is full of song and strange, weird stage settings, and has made a tremendous hit at every Sullivan-Considine house it has thus far played. Besides the headliner, there is Max Duffek, who is going round the world in a million different ways. Wilson and De Mondeville in A Thanksgiving Eve, and Gertie Everett, an Australian comedienne. ORPHEUM—With William H. Thompson, in The Pride of the Regiment, as the leading feature, this week's bill is of more than ordinary note. The Hirschoff troupe of Siberian dancers and singers is a great big feature, and dainty Mabel McCane, singing her own songs, is another very attractive and classy number. Quinlan and Mack, two old minstrel stars, in The Traveling Dentist; Bob Adams and Bob Alden, in Before the Party; Jimmie McDonald, monologist, and Paul Kleist, pantomimist.

PANTAGES—The new acts are Coyne and Tinlin, whirlwind acrobats; Keene and Adams, society entertainers; James R. Waters, the character comedian; Deltorelli and Glissando, comic eccentric and electric clowns; Redway and Lawrence, in high-class singing and dancing; and Herbert's dogs and cats, a real animal novelty. Helen Lowe and the Pantagescope complete the bill which starts at 2:30 today. E. MORGENSTERN.

SAN RAFAEL, Nov. 12.—The case of A. W. Powning, owner of the Garden Theatre, versus Millen Building Inspectors of this city, was called for hearing Thursday before Judge Van Nostrand, and owing to the illness of Joseph Hawkins, city attorney, the case was postponed until October 25th. Richard J. Jose and his company were advertised to give a performance at the Garden Theatre, July 4th. A building ordinance had been passed previous to this, affecting all buildings in San Rafael. Thomas Phillips, manager Garden Theatre, decided that the improvements demanded of the theatre by the building ordinance were unjust, and refused to conform to them. And the theatre was closed by the city officials. Before the Jose performance, Phillips secured an injunction from Judge Van Nostrand, restraining the city officials from interfering with the performance. Everything was in readiness on the night of July the 4th, to present Jose and his company, when City Attorney Joseph Hawkins appeared at the theatre and stopped the performance on the grounds that the theatre's license had expired June 30th. The theatre management had made demands for licenses several days before and had been refused. They also offered the money to Hawkins that night, but he declined to accept, and gave notice to Mr. Jose and theatre representatives that if they attempted to play or give the performance he, Hawkins, would arrest every one connected with the theatre, also the performers. The following week Hawkins was cited to appear in court, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court. The case has been called several times and continued at the request of Hawkins. It was called again Thursday, but Hawkins was ill.

SAN JOSE, Nov. 14.—San Jose is hungry for stock and the only man who can pull the purse strings here is coming. Ed Redmond, the popular actor and theatrical manager, has organized a first-class stock company which includes many new faces and on Monday, November 15th, he comes to the Garden Theatre, and a rousing welcome is being planned for the opening night by the theatre-goers of this city. Among the members of the new organization are Myrtle Vane, Kernan Cripps, Charley Gunn, Nellie Hazelton and others. Alwyn Theal, a scenic artist of decided talent, has been engaged to paint the scenery. The opening bill will be In the Bishop's Carriage, to be followed by The Spoilers.

Nellie Boyd is Dead

FRESNO, Nov. 16.—In the passing away so unexpectedly of Miss Nellie Boyd at her country home on Elm avenue last Saturday night, the community has lost one of its best known, most beloved and honored women. The news of her sudden death came as a shock to her many friends throughout Fresno county and the social circles in which she circulated for years has been plunged into deep mourning by her unlooked for demise. Miss Boyd was well known in the business world and had taken an active part in the affairs of the old Raisin Growers' Association. She had the distinction of being one of the pioneer vineyardists of the county. In clubdom she was a prominent figure and her public career on the stage, before she retired to her country home, will linger for years to come in the minds of those who knew her. She was a graduate of the old school of acting and before coming to California gained fame before the footlights in New York. For years she headed repertoire companies out of New York city. In the early 70's she came West and for eight or ten years was leading woman in various companies that were organized in San Francisco. In theatrical circles she was known as the first woman to head a company out of San Francisco. She played in all the principal cities of the State. For several seasons she played successive brief engagements in the old Riggs Opera House on J street, between Kern and Inyo streets. The site is occupied by the Armory Stables. During her engagement in Fresno, Thomas Harrell, now deputy county surveyor, was the director and piano player in the orchestra. As far as can be learned, the only people still connected with professional theatrical companies who were at various times with Miss Boyd's company are Theodore Roberts, George Welty and Robert M. Eberle. Welty was her manager for several years and at times he appeared in minor parts. It was during one of these visits to Fresno that Miss Boyd decided to locate here permanently, when she retired from the stage. In 1885 she left the profession in which she had been so successful, and moved to this city. She purchased the vineyard on Elm avenue and made a home for her aged mother. A few years ago her mother died. In 1893 Miss Boyd was among those who prepared the Fresno county exhibit for the World's Fair at Chicago. She was the first president of the Parlor Lecture Club and for years took a prominent part in the State Federation. Since becoming a resident of Fresno, her life had been one of love and service and her noble career will be remembered not only locally but by those with whom she was associated in her brilliant career on the stage.

BILLY ABRAMS, who was next to death's door last week with pneumonia, is now rapidly convalescing.

Marjorie Rambeau Lillian Burnett

A prominent Southern California manager, writing recently to THE DRAMATIC REVIEW, said that he believed there was all kinds of talent in the West ready to be acknowledged if given the opportunity. To quote him: "We raise a fine crop of citrus fruits down here, but it is nothing to the crop of lemons sent us by the Eastern agents—so keep a lookout for Coast actors." This brief message explains the situation in a nutshell. We have a world of talent here—and the East is eager to recognize it. One of the discoveries of the last two years is Marjorie, who is being featured by the Chas. King company in San Diego. Miss Rambeau is a tall, sparkling beauty of magnetic and forceful temperament. She is now twenty years of age and since she was fourteen has been playing leading parts. Her development has been along the most artistic lines and today she is a very clever emotional actress who is fast claiming serious attention for big work. In San Diego she is the idol of theatre-goers and her popularity has been a great factor in attracting the present big business enjoyed at the Pickwick Theatre there.

Lillian Burnett, the character woman of the Charles King company, as will be noticed by a glance at our front page, is a handsome, refined looking woman, who has shown particular ability in grande dame roles and in parts requiring subtle and spontaneous comedy treatment. She has become a very popular member of the stock company and her success is in evidence with each new production.

Boston's Magnificent New Grand Opera House

BOSTON, November 8.—The hope of Bostonians for a permanent home for grand opera has at last been realized in the completion of a cost of a million and a quarter dollars of a magnificent opera house. The opera house was formally opened to-night with the presentation of La Gioconda in Italian, with Nordica, Constantini, Louise Homer and Pulcini in the principal parts.

Sensational Combine of Stock Houses

NEW YORK, November 9.—After many years of theatrical warfare in California, Fred Belasco of San Francisco and Oliver Morosco of Los Angeles met here to-day and concluded business partners, through the terms of which is launched one of the largest independent theatrical enterprises in the West. Belasco and Morosco will head a chain of first-class stock theatres, embracing all the prominent cities of the Pacific Coast, and extending as far east as Chicago, a circuit which will bear a similar relation to stock producing in the West as the Orpheum circuit does to vaudeville. Prominent theatrical capital in New York has been enlisted to back this far-reaching project, and the work of organizing the system, closing with theatres in various cities and opening the companies, will begin at once. The nucleus of the new circuit will be the stock theatres now owned and operated by Belasco and Morosco in San Francisco and Los Angeles respectively. Within two weeks Belasco has sold out all his holding in the Belasco theatre in Los Angeles, and henceforth will have no connection with it in any way. This leaves the Los Angeles stock field clear for Morosco with his Burbank and Majestic theatres. These two theatres Morosco has pooled with Belasco, with the latter's Alcazar theatre in San Francisco, and the new downtown playhouse which Belasco says will be completed inside of a year, on a site which Belasco said today is within two blocks of that of the old Belasco theatre on O'Farrell street. These four theatres will serve as the keystone or an arch of Belasco-Morosco stock playhouses extending from Seattle and Spokane through Portland, Oakland, Salt Lake City, Denver, Kansas City and possibly into Chicago. Under the terms of the agreement Morosco will return to the Pacific Coast within two weeks and immediately begin closing the leases for the various theatres of the circuit, some of which are already under option. It is understood that one shortly will be opened in Oakland. In the meantime Belasco will remain here organizing the various companies and closing contracts for a large number of plays. In fact, under the plan agreed upon, Belasco will spend about six months out of each year in New York attending to this branch of the combination. Belasco and Morosco, seen at the Hotel Astor by a DRAMATIC REVIEW correspondent, said: "We have been business competitors long enough to come to the conclusion that there is more money in alliance between us than there is in rivalry. In the past we have been bidding up the prices of plays, with the result that when one or the other of us finally secured the desired play its royalty made a bigger hole in the profits than either of us could really afford, and because of this condition we perhaps were forced to forego the production of many big Broadway successes which at an ordinary royalty we could have presented to our respective patrons."

Inquiries at both the home houses in San Francisco and Los Angeles elicited no information in addition to the above. That will be forthcoming when Fred Belasco and Oliver Morosco return home. To make the situation more interesting, John Blackwood of the Belasco is in New York figuring on where he stands on the play proposition, for his house has always had the best of plays in the market. His partner, Captain Jones, told the editor of the DRAMATIC REVIEW that as they were members of the stock managers' association he did not anticipate any difficulty in the way of securing plays.

T.M.A. Memorial Service

Spotlights

The Third Degree at the Marysville Theatre played to a packed house on Saturday night. Fernanda Elisen, a star in the most difficult role, was perfect. Her clever, whole soul, realistic manner of acting won every heart. Paul Everton, as Richard Brewster, the lawyer (whom Annie Jeffries, the factory girl and the young wife thought could do anything), is certainly a finished actor. Friday evening, Nov. 12, a concert by America's favorite bandmaster, John Phillip Sousa, and his great band.

Over nine hundred popular songs, fifteen successful musical plays and vaudeville sketches galore have been written and composed by George M. Cohan, who will be seen here at the an Ness two weeks hence. His revenues from royalties on his musical plays, together with his interests in all Cohan-Harris productions, are said to be enormous. He will not be thirty-two years of age until Van Ness two weeks hence. His the 4th of next July, and by that time will have three more plays to his credit, one for himself, one for Victor Moore and a new play for Edna Wallace Hopper.

Lo, the Askin musical comedy, headed by John Young, is not to come here. This week it is in Portland, then follows Salt Lake, then one night stands down to San Antonio, then another week of one night stands up to Chicago, where five weeks hence "Lo" will begin an indefinite run at the Studebaker theatre.

Van Ness Theatre

The second and last week of The Traveling Salesman closes tomorrow night, after which comes the big Cohan show, The Talk of New York. Already interest is acute and two weeks of big business is in sight.

Princess Theatre

This is the last week of The Politicians and the piece, which has been seen here for an aggregate of several weeks, will probably be shelved. The new play to go on Monday is The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer, a Sam Bernard success, which has been made over to suit the Kolb and Dill requirements.

Alcazar Theatre

This has been quite an important week at the Alcazar, for it has served to introduce the new leading man, John Ince. After a careful judgment, it seems that Mr. Ince has made good and will continue to make good. Mr. Ince has a most attractive, rugged personality. He has a smile that expresses volumes and a forceful style of acting that at times suggests Henry Miller before he got into the habit of ascending into the heavens with the termination of every sentence, and at other times one is reminded of the late Harry Glazer, through some trick of voice mannerism and facial twist. Mr. Ince gets over the footlights at once and, judging from the verdicts of several female Allan Dales, who were seated next to me, I should say that he will become very popular in this city. His Teddy North was portrayed with exaggeration, without pose and with an effective ease that was distinctly pleasurable. Next to Mr. Ince, Adele Belgarde claimed the honors by a very amusing and at all times unobjectionable portrayal of Miss Prissims, the dance hall pianist. This delectable personage is generally exhibited with various characterizations of gross vulgarity and it is noteworthy when it is found possible to present her successfully in a legitimate comedy way. Herbert Farjeon was particularly good as the judge, and Charles Trowbridge showed decided ability as the district attorney. This young actor is cut out for big things. Louis Bennison played Half-Breed Joe with his usual ability. Evelyn Vaughan, in the part of Mrs. Weston, gave the character every possible value, and Bessie Barriscale, as Midge, and Grace Travers, as Molly Larkins, were good. Howard Hickman, as Weston, William Garwood, as Bill Ransom, Will Walling, as Joe, and Charles Dow Clarke, as Pete, were all their opportunities called for.

Garrick Theatre

It was in 1890 or thereabouts that Mrs. Romualdo Pacheco, a native daughter and the member of an old Spanish family, wrote Incog, and it was shortly after that Charles Dickson made his first big professional hit in the farce, playing the leading male role. The confusion of identity, based upon personal resemblance, has been one of the commoner methods of introducing those complications which are always necessary for the development of dramatic plot, whether it be tragedy or farce. Mrs. Pacheco went Shakespeare's Two Dromeos one better, and those other dramatists as well, who used two characters resembling one another. She introduced three characters, all alike as three peas, from the soles of their modish shoes to the tops of their natty straw hats. Even walking sticks, cuff-buttons and beards were each and all of the same pattern. Incog was laid away, after many years of usefulness, and Charles Dickman passed on to better things. But the basic idea of the farce was too good to be kept in the graveyard of dramatic successes, and has been resurrected in the form of a musical comedy, under the even more appropriate title of The Three Twins. There is enough good material in old Incog to make an excellent musical show. There is to begin with plenty of ginger to the piece. The choruses in the present production are drilled to the minute and attractively costumed. There is some good music of its kind, and coming from such a source as Incog, it follows as the night the day, that the comedy is excellent, both in lines and in situations. The bright particular star of the piece is Victor Morley. He wears a blonde wig and beard, a blue serge suit, a red cravat, and carries a bamboo walking stick, just as two other characters do, but he alone has the center of the stage, the spot light, the applause and the big type. Morley is that rare combination of a good tenor of the musical comedy class, who is also a comedian. He works with little or no effort apparently, but like the excellent actor that he is, he makes every point. In the second act, The Epic of the Single Hair, as recited by the inimitable Morley, took the house, especially the bald-headed portion of the audience. He does a one-man melodrama which did not suggest imitation on his part. Harry Hanlon played the blustering, dyspeptic General Stanhope with good effect. Minnie Allen sang a lyric called Cuddle Up a Little Closer, Baby Mine, which has gone so well with Garrick audiences that the whistlers on the street are giving it their attention. Helen Salinger, as the weeping, sorrowing widow, made a big hit in her part. Bessie Clifford, as the Yama Yama girl, danced as well as she sings. Florenz Kolb was good as one of the twins, and as much may be said of W. H. Woodside, who was cast for the third of the three twins. Ned Moreland, in a small part, made a distinct impression. Eddie Brown, as Dr. Siegfried Hartman, M. D., B. U. G. N. U. T., was also clever. Matthew, by Frank Finch, and Johnson, by Harry Johnson, were also excellent in small roles. Ada Bateman, Lillian Sadlier and Minna Allen should not be passed by without notice of any kind. Last but by no means least, the chorus should have a few flowers for their excellent ensemble work. It is safe to say that the Three Twins is good for several seasons yet.

Valencia Theatre

The big two weeks' business achieved by the Eddie Foy company is a striking proof that a good show will get business in San Francisco. The Foy season has been big from the start and the show has been voted a hummer. The fine work of Foy, who is alone in his particular line of work, is always enjoyable. Then Belle Gold, the merriest and most fascinating of soubrettes, is a great drawing card. All through the company does most enjoyable work.

Personals

VAIL HOBART has closed with the Newman-Foltz company.

ROY CLEMENT closes with the Empire stock in Fresno on November 21.

ERNEST WILKS writes that he is playing the lead in Frederick Thompson's play, Via Wireless, following John Sainpolis in the part.

THE Newman-Foltz company are making a splendid impression everywhere. In Fresno this week they are packing the Barton Opera House.

GEO. VON BLIX has been succeeded in the Newman-Foltz company by Edwin Hoddell. Mildred Fitzgerald is also a new member of the company.

THERE is a report current at the time of going to press that C. P. Hill, the veteran Oakland manager, is dead. We trust the report is unfounded.

JOHN CORT dropped in from Chicago last week for a look over his new theatre here. Fred Bucey assured him that as the last brick had been laid and the concrete work was in, the opening was in sight.

GEORGE GILL, one of the most popular and experienced showmen on the road, is in town ahead of The Talk of New York, and there is every evidence he is here, too, for there is already a keen interest manifested in the coming of the big Cohan show.

ADELAIDE HARLAND, who was here earlier in the season with Kolb and Dill, has joined "The Land of Nod" company and will play the part she assumed last season, that of "The Chorus Girl." Miss Harland succeeds Florence Sinnot, who has resigned to go to New York.

AL HOOGE (Judge) is in the city preparing the way for The Soul Kiss, which comes to the Garrick week after next. The piece is a big musical comedy, featuring Pertina, a European dancer, who has never been seen in the West. The Judge, who is distinctly a Western product, is in his home town the first time in seven years. He has been a big success in the East and is ranked among the big ones and the live ones.

MRS. PHOEBE SHADDOCK, mother of Mrs. W. J. Elleford, died in Oakland in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elleford on Nov. 6, at the age of 79. Her death was the result of a gradual decline, the result of old age. The interment took place at Cypress Lawn Cemetery in this city. Mrs. Shaddock lived for a period greatly exceeding the usual run of mortals and her life was filled with quiet benefaction and thoughtful acts for others. She numbered many friends on both sides of the bay.

LIONEL BROUGH, the English comedian, died in London last Monday. He was 73 years old. Brough was born at Pontypool, March 10, 1836. He made his first appearance on the stage at the London Lyceum in Prince Pretty Pet, Dec. 26, 1854. Among his known impersonations were Tony Lumpkin, which he played 777 times, and Bob Acres. He visited America in 1885 with Violet Cameron. During his career he played in almost every first class theatre in the United Kingdom, America and South Africa.

Donna Seymour, While Working Up Angels Poses as Big Manager

Donna Seymour, erstwhile theatrical promoter, is being anxiously inquired for by about twenty-five chorus girls, men and a couple of "angels" who were engaged at good salaries to take part in a mammoth production of Mr. Bluebeard. On September 18th last Donna Seymour registered at the Fairmont. Two days later she removed to the St. Francis. On the morning of September 25th there appeared a carefully worded want ad. in the papers, stating that a manager, treasurer and advertising manager were wanted for a big theatrical company. One youth, whose name cannot be learned, bit. He was to be made manager for the modest sum of $500, which was to be a bond as a guarantee of good faith. The youth made frequent visits to the St. Francis, eager and anxious to learn when the big stock company would materialize, and during one of these visits the hotel officials at the St. Francis became suspicious. The young man was questioned and said that he was to be the manager of the mammoth "Mr. Bluebeard" company. An investigation followed, which resulted in the matter being reported to the police. This resulted in Donna Seymour receiving notice to leave the hotel. She was unable to pay her hotel bill and left a trunk and two suit cases as security for the amount of her bill. Nothing was heard from her until about two weeks ago, when she appeared, paid her bill and had her baggage transferred to the Manx. She was accompanied by a youth named M. H. Beard. Beard said that he answered one of her advertisements in Los Angeles and deposited $200 with her for the privilege of acting as treasurer for her theatrical company. Meanwhile she secured the services of another young man, who was to act as advertising manager. For this privilege he also paid $200. Their salaries were to be $25 a week. The second youth was N. M. Burdick, who was staying at the Larne when he was engaged. Formal contracts were drawn up, in which acknowledgment was made of the receipt of the money and witnessed by a notary. With a treasurer and advertising manager and $400 of their money she began to organize the Mr. Bluebeard company. Twenty-five people were engaged and a hall in the American Theatre building rented in which to rehearse. Last Saturday week Donna Seymour announced that she would be obliged to leave the city for a couple of days. She failed to return, and on Monday following the company was locked out of the hall. Donna said she was going to Los Angeles. Perhaps she did, but evidently not to stop long. In the meantime the various angels are mourning and Charley Sinclair, who was engaged to direct the piece, is the only one ahead of the game. He scented a bad odor and drew out $20, for which he put in two hours' work. Wise man, but as for the "angels" they got only what they deserved. Any show proposition that is to be floated through the daily papers is generally a fraud—it will not bear investigation through the regular theatrical channels.

The Orpheum

Charles the First vies in popular favor this week with a military act bearing the appealing title of Our Boys in Blue. This act is the book of tactics converted to ragtime. It has been a long period, even in vaudeville, since an act has been seen like this, as regards motion. The figures projected on the screen by a moving picture machine do not go any faster or with greater precision. No real soldiers ever drilled as these make believes do, who go through exercises that would be new and strange to the ordinary rank and file Uncle Sam's hired men. No Red Cross nurse ever scaled a wall with the artistic abandon that the first-aid-to-the-injured lady does. This lady, name unknown, who plays the part of the nurse, possesses in addition to an unusual share of good looks, exceptional athletic ability. Lulu McConnell and Grant Simpson are two rough-house comedians who make good with the audience. With those who delight in this form of merriment they scored unqualifiedly. They have a string of quick action patter that is all their own, too. A few of Lulu's gags ought to be blue-penciled however. They may be O. K. for some houses, but not the Orpheum of San Francisco. The Sunshine and Tempest Trio do some original steps. They have a good act, and are deserving of all the applause they get, and more too. Bobby Pandur does not look like his name. One expects to see a chap about the size of a tooth-pick. Bobby is nearer the proportions of a ferry building pile. He has more muscles than the anatomists know anything about. The same is true of Bobby's little brother, who is as large as Bobby. They both look like the cuts in the back of the magazines, advertising exercising apparatus. Charles the First is still a strong hit. Minnie Seligman and William Bramwell, in the vaudeville melodrama, The Drums of Doom, are also popular. The Bounding Gordons continue to bound as astoundingly as ever.

Pantages-Empire

The Empire this week has one of the best shows of the season. Were I asked which act was the hit I'd have to study a long time before choosing; nevertheless, it's between Yule and Simpson and the Still City quartette. Canaris, the magician, has a very mystifying act, but entirely too long, but is very good. W. B. Ramsdell and the Ramsdell sisters have a neat singing and dancing turn, very much up to date. The costumes are classy and the girls are pretty and splendid dancers and singers. Mr. Ramsdell, not to be forgotten, is exceedingly clever. The Still City Quartette are four excellent voices. The basso, Glem Schoaff, deserves special mention. The burlesque they presented on a baseball game was extremely funny. This quartette is going to be a big hit all over the Coast. The Luge Picaro troupe are equal to any hand balancing troupe that has ever played in San Francisco. Yule and Simpson have a great act in one. Yule is very funny and possesses a beautiful voice and his imitation of Scanlon in the Sleep Baby, Sleep, was encored many times. His imitations are good and his burlesque on grand opera made the audience wish he would sing the real thing. Miss Simpson is pretty and has a wonderful mass of blonde hair. Swan and his alligators is really a marvelous act. Mr. Swan does some very wonderful stunts under water. For instance, he picked up thirty-four coins with his mouth while under the water in thirty-eight seconds. He has an act worth the price of admission alone. The Pantagescope is up to the standard, and the Pantages orchestra is, as always, good.

The National

The Labaskaus are a clever team of acrobats, but the real feature of the act is their dog Folly. Killion and Moore both have fine voices and they can sing and dance. They have a neat act that is greatly enjoyed. Howard Missimer and company present dandy setting that is spoiled by lack of light. They present a fantastic comedy that is of no particular merit. Edna Davenport—every one in Frisco knows Edna—has a dandy style of her own that wins from the start. We don't like your opening song, Edna; but you sing it very skillfully, and your Dago song, My Coz Curso, is a winner. So are you. If vaudeville had more like you. The five musical Lovelands have the standard musical act. The girls are pretty and the act is dressed neatly. Their various musical numbers are well played and much enjoyed. Geo. Evers, the minstrel monologist, has a lot of funny stuff, delivered in a clever manner. George, you are a very, very good performer. Ernest Pautzer & Co. have a good act, but it is a direct steal from the more famous Willie.

American Theatre

Good management and a real knowledge of the vaudeville business is bound to show results, and this condition of affairs is in evidence at the American, where business has increased to a very prosperous extent. The bill this week is headed by Besonette and Newman, who are sensational acrobats. They are followed by Sharp and Turek, who give a pleasing exhibition of singing and dancing. Burton and De Elmo give an entertaining musical turn, which, although it is of a conventional nature, is exceedingly well executed. Fagan and Byron, who have played every end of town with their musical turn, are pretty well known by this time. They give a skilful act, but it lacks novelty or special interest. Lester and Shannon, in Junie McCree's sketch, Astrology, have a choice selection of slang and some dramatic moments. Captain Nat Ressler and company repeat their wonderful revolver scenic act, which is duplicated by no one else in the world. Two good subjects in moving pictures are included in this splendid program.

The Wigwam

Anna Eva Fay is the featured act at the Wigwam this week. The balance of the bill shows Frobel and Ruge; Bandy and Fields; Elsie Crescy and company; Colby and May; and Rose Stevens.

Big Vaudeville Combination

A three cornered vaudeville war is imminent throughout the United States, says a dispatch from New York. The first gun was sounded last Saturday in Wilmington, Del., when articles of incorporation were filed by the United theatres securities company. This concern includes all the big vaudeville interests east of the Mississippi, with the exception of William Morris. The big company was organized, it is stated, to head off the threatened invasion of the eastern field by the San Francisco Orpheum circuit. This will leave Morris and the Orpheum, who will be rivals in the local field, to cope with a common adversary in the east. It was announced a few weeks ago that Martin Beck, the manager of the Orpheum circuit, was in the east planning to carry his circuit all the way to New York. Heretofore the Orpheum has confined itself to the western field, acting in harmony with Keith & Proctor, one of the biggest vaudeville concerns in the east. When Keith & Proctor learned that the Orpheum was to enter the eastern field as a rival they proceeded to unite all eastern vaudeville houses to repel the invasion. The result was the organization of the United Theatre Securities company. The incorporators of this gigantic syndicate are: B. F. Keith, F. V. Proctor, E. F. Albee, William Hammerstein and P. G. Williams of New York, M. Shea of Buffalo and Toronto, James H. Moore of Detroit and Rochester, Harry Davis of Pittsburg, James C. Duffield of the Canadian circuit, A. Paul Keith, S. Z. Poli of Springfield and H. B. Chase of Washington. It is against this combination and William Morris that the Orpheum will find its opposition if it invades the Eastern field.

Vaudeville Notes

Central Theatre—Dick Cummings, the wonder, who can build farces while you wait, has his company working this week in Deceiving Your Wife. Dick himself plays the rounder and is a big hit. Katherine Merley does the fiery, short speech woman, with great success, and Al Watson shows his cleverness by presenting a most amusing Dutchman. Adelaide Keith, the new soubrette, is a magnetic, hard working little woman and her success is positive in the part of the show girl. Chas. Wagner, Billy Vest and Phennie Edwards hold up their ends well. The vaudeville section comprises Kradwell, juggling on the unicycle and slack wire; Arnold Duo, gymnasts; George the First, the clever monkey; Frank Clark, a finished and high class monologist; and Josephine Connelly, in illustrated songs.

Victor Moore

Victor Moore, who scored a tremendous success in George M. Cohan's musical play, The Talk of New York, is announced to appear in this brilliant musical comedy at the Van Ness Theatre next week. Mr. Moore as Kid Burns, the race track gambler, is said to have a line of talk that is startling. The role is a continuation of the one in Forty Five Minutes from Broadway, and brings the Kid forward as a highly successful race track gambler. The story, briefly told, is this: The Kid has "parleyed" a five dollar bill, and, by pyramiding his bets, has run it into a fortune. He falls in love with the daughter of a millionaire, and encounters all sorts of difficulties before winning her. There is said to be a fascinating "villainness" who sneaks her way in and out of the plot, dressed most fetchingly, and who, exercising her feminine prerogative, suddenly changes her mind and becomes distressingly good. Mr. Cohan is said to have given The Talk of New York many of his best songs, among them being, Follow Your Uncle Dudley, Put a Little Bet Down for Me, Mr. Burns of New Rochelle, When We are M-a Double R-I-E-D, Burning Up the Boulevard, Busy Little Broadway, When a Fellow's On the Level With a Girl That's On the Square, Tha's Some Love, Claremont, Drink With Me, Under Any Old Flag At All, and Gee, Ain't I Glad to Be Home Again. In the big company supporting Mr. Moore are the following: Emma Littlefield, Mae Phelps, Charlotte Lambert, Louise Brackett, Charlotte Gray, Dell Irish, Marion Finley, Marie Land, George O'Donnell, John Conroy, William A. Williams, Jo Smith Marba, Maurice Elliott; Arthur V. Gibson, Al McGary, Arthur J. Thornton, Edward Yeager, Charles Mack, George Thomas, and a perfect Cohan chorus of sixty.

Princess Theatre

Kolb and Dill will have another new production for next week, when they will present The Rich Mr. Hogenheimer. The piece has been reconstructed to fit the requirements of the two comedians. It is expected that The Rich Mr. Hogenheimer will equal the success of Dream City, which played to capacity houses for a month. Meantime The Politicians is drawing big audiences. It will be given its last performance on Sunday night.

Special from New York

* * * Several members of Oscar Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House company and of the Metropolitan Opera House company arrived here last week on the steamship La Touraine and Principe de Piedmonte. La Touraine had a rough passage and for eight hours was hove to on account of an accident to her engines. In the party on her were Oscar Anselmi, who is to succeed Campanini as leading conductor; Mrs. Anselmi, Armand Crabba, a barytone; Charles Dalmores, tenor; Mme. Augusta Doria, Mme. Marietta Mezarin, Leandro Pla, Lebastio, Pla, M. strarmand and Jean Vallier. Mme. Dorio is to take the leading role in Electra. She said she had seen one performance of this opera and was most enthusiastic about it. The Principe de Piedmonte had about twenty members of the Metropolitan company, among whom were Pietro Audisio, a tenor; Angelo Bado, Giuseppe Tech-

Orpheum Will Present Vaudeville At Garrick

Orpheum vaudeville shows, with a weekly change of bill, will be given at the Garrick Theatre on the conclusion of the present arrangements between the Orpheum management and Gottlob, Marx & Co. This is in line with the announcement made in THE DRAMATIC REVIEW some eight months ago. It is not known whether the regular Orpheum bill will be played at the Garrick. Notice of the change was received in a brief telegram by John Morrissey, resident manager, Thursday afternoon. The telegram was sent by Morris Meyerfeld and contained only the information that the Garrick would be turned into a vaudeville house.

Bert Levey Changes Los Angeles Office

Bert Levey, the booming independent agent, has changed his Los Angeles office to 707 Delta Building, at 428 S. Spring street, with Mr. Palmer in charge, who succeeds Louis B. Jacobs. Mr. Levey has seen his business grow to wonderful proportions in the last year. A late move has been an affiliation with the Fischer Circuit of the Northwest.

The Actors' Fund of America

A Call to All Those Connected With the Theatrical Profession in America

The beginning of our new year for annual membership and registration is Thanksgiving day, November 25th. In order to keep up the good work started last February, all members should make it a point to remit three dollars to the Fund as near that date as possible, for annual dues and registration, as new registration can be used in connection with spring, summer and the following winter seasons' engagements, of course, annual dues must be paid when registering. The Bureau was instrumental in securing several hundred engagements for its members this summer and fall; all of which speaks well for the success of the Fund's new venture. Its registration bureau is no longer an experiment, it is an established fact. It is confidently hoped, and the present outlook is very encouraging, that by May 1st, five to six thousand names will be on the annual list. Elizabeth Menzeli, Blanche Walsh, Augustus Thomas and David Warfield are a few of the latest names added to the life membership list through the efforts of Thomas McGrath, who is in charge of the new bureau, and he has positive assurance of at least fifty more names before Thanksgiving day. The Fund bureau can only look out for its own supporters, registered members, so if you are not among that large majority it behooves you to join at once. This is a grand profession of ours and public appeals to support our sick and indigent and bury our departed associates is not a dignified proceeding to those of us who take a pride in our noble calling. The reputable managers are doing their best to help us in the good work, and we know that all our brother and sister professionals join us in the hope that every self-respecting member of our calling will avail themselves of the privilege of becoming an integral part of the Actors' Fund, our great charity. It is the aim of the officers to make the Fund the great clearing house of our profession, as it rightly should be, and the membership therein should be the first requisite to an audience for an engagement with all managers, if we are strong enough in members by May 1st. The question in every manager's office (in New York City at least) should be, "Are you a registered member of the Actors' Fund?" We feel certain that that point will be reached if we can show a registration of 5,000 members of the profession who are willing to help those in their own calling who are unable to help themselves. This should be the representative organization, the natural headquarters of the profession, where everyone connected with the theatre should be known; where every professional's address should be. Is yours there?

Mme. Bianchi, Howard and Howard and George Bloomquest Big Hits In Oakland

In Old Kentucky opened at the Macdonough, 8, to a capacity house and has been playing to big business ever since. The story is too old to bear repetition, suffice it is to say that it has just as much charm as of yore, and the company is fully adequate to meet all requirements. The Talk of New York, 14; The Traveling Salesman, 15-17; The Three Twins, 25-27, return engagement. The first Western production of The Traitor was given at The Liberty 8, and although Bishop's players did everything in their power to make the play a success it did not seem to appeal very strongly to our theatre goers. There is not enough action to the play, which seemed to be decidedly slow at various stages. The members of the company gave a good account of themselves. The portrayal of John Graham, the ex-chief of the clan, by Sidney Ayres was a fine piece of work and won the enthusiastic approval of the audience. Robert Harrison as his rival had a clear conception of the role and acted well. Henry Shumer made an animated mountaineer and looked well the part. George Webster made a very acceptable judge, and George Friend as the Hon. Beverly Johnson was equally as good. A couple of fine negro characters were portrayed by William Wobbert, and Mina Gleason Florence Oakley was very pleasing in the leading feminine role. Good performances were given by Robert Lawlor, Walter Whipple, George Rand, Andrew Bennison, Clarence Elmer, Edith Lyle and Claribel Becker. Business just now is in a very healthy state, and a steady increase in attendance is very noticeable. The Rose of the Rancho will follow. At the Orpheum crowded houses still prevail, and this week's programme seems to meet with popular approval. Howard and Howard and Mme. Bianchi divide the honors, closely followed by Hal Godfrey & Co., Keno Walsh and Melrose, General Edward La Vine, Martinette and Sylvester, Ballerini's canine tumblers and Geo. Bloomquest & Co. Judging from the applause this week's bill at the Bell is more than giving satisfaction, and the house is well filled at every performance. The programme consists of Harris and Robinson, Spaulding and Dupee, Helen Beresford & Co., Josephine Ainsley, George and Bella Stelling. The new innovation of moving pictures is making an immense hit at the Broadway, and Manager Smith is more than satisfied at the new turn of affairs. Sunday, 21, will mark the final appearance of Miss Oakley at The Liberty and a large demonstration is already planned as a compliment to the popular leading lady. Mrs. Pheby Shaddock, mother of Mrs. W. J. Elleford, passed away the 5th at the ripe old age of 79. She was well known all over the city for her kind benevolence and many acts of charity. Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall will follow Brown of Harvard at The Liberty, and incidentally will be the medium of introducing Bishop's new leading lady to the public. Manager Jackson reports a large advance sale for the Jomelli concert. The Women of Woodcraft will have a benefit at The Liberty 17, and the Taft and Pennoyer Mutual Aid Society 24.

LOUIS SCHEELINE.

Billie Burke Is Not to Marry Young College Boy

PORTLAND, Or., Nov. 4.—Rumors of a whirlwind romance and a prospective speedy wedding were wafted into Portland to-day with the simultaneous arrival of Leo B. Westcott, a student at Berkeley, and a son of Mrs. Robert J. Hancock, reputed Oakland millionairess, and Miss Billie Burke, the actress. News had preceded the young people of their simultaneous departure from San Francisco. It had also been stated in messages from various inquirers at Berkeley that young Westcott was so violently wooing Miss Burke that he had deserted his studies to follow her north. Miss Burke was found this evening staying at the Portland Hotel. Mr. Westcott was found there also. "Is it true you are engaged to marry Mr. Westcott?" Miss Burke was asked. "I must decline to be interviewed on that subject," the actress replied, and she stuck to it. "Yes," she finally vouchsafed to another question, "Mr. Westcott is a good friend of mine." "Will you marry Miss Burke soon, as rumor has reported?" was queried of Mr. Westcott. "I have nothing to say, was all Mr. Westcott would reply, except to add: "I have come here on a pleasure trip." Persons who were on the same train declare that Mr. Westcott and Miss Burke were much together on the trip from San Francisco, and that the young student's very devoted attentions seemed to be far from displeasing to their recipient.

BERKELEY, Nov. 8.—That he was a victim of circumstances and the jest of a friend in San Francisco was the statement made to-night by Leo Westcott, freshman student of the university whose reported engagements first to Billie Burke, the dainty actress, and later to her niece, Miss Bartlett, attracted much attention. Westcott returned from the north with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Hancock of San Francisco. "A friend in San Francisco, for reasons best known to himself, took advantage of the friendship I have for Miss Burke and her niece and my trip north to Portland on business to weave a yarn about my engagement, first to Miss Burke and then to Miss Bartlett. The reported engagements are absurd. I have been made the victim of a jest. I intended to stay in Portland, but my parents came there when this rumor started and I came down with them."

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The much heralded New Theatre has been opened. The prices are from $2 down to 50c, or those prevailing in all first class theatres in this city. The idea is backed by ample capital to make artistic successes of productions regardless of expense. The first production was on Monday night, the bill being Antony and Cleopatra, with E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe in the name parts. On Thursday Chas. Knoblanck's comedy, A College in Air, was produced. A dress rehearsal had been held on the previous Saturday night. Some of the critics seemed to find fault with the acoustics of the house. Others thought the stock company had not been long enough in training. Each local paper gave columns to descriptions and pictures of the beautiful building. Of the opening performance the Times said in part: "Whatever the ultimate effect of The New Theatre's production of Antony and Cleopatra, there can be no two opinions about the difficulty of the task in this its initial enterprise, the generous spirit in which it was approached, and the earnestness with which the effort has been made. The theatre itself is a delight to the eye, even if, as appeared on the opening night, something yet remains to be accomplished to bring complete satisfaction to the ear; it is rich in detailed comfort, and in every sense equals, if it does not surpass, the promise that the founders made. It provides, in other words, a playhouse which if not superior in beauty and appointments to the great state endowed theatres abroad, is yet the peer of any of them in solidity of construction, beauty of design and splendor of decoration; it is an institution of which the city may be distinctly proud, and deserves liberal patronage and encouragement at the outset. There was less complaint of the acoustics last night than at the general rehearsal, but some changes will probably be necessary before the theatre is completely satisfying in this respect. And the question of whether the house is not too large for modern drama and more intimate comedy may not well be decided until experiments have been made. The task has been a large one, and, in all fairness, patience should prevail until the initial problems have been overcome. This, too, in spite of the fact that the net result of its first production is disappointment. Spectacularly and histrionically much more might have been accomplished. The effort to avoid excessive elaboration has occasionally resulted in an underemphasis of what might have been more pictorially effective." * * * The regular season opera at the Manhattan Opera House opened last Monday night amid demonstrations of general pleasure. Mr. Hammerstein's auditorium was occupied by a large and appropriately clad assemblage which applauded warmly the production of the evening and encouraged heartily the efforts of the singers to interpret grave thoughts. The beginning of the new season was made especially interesting by its proof of the continuance of Mr. Hammerstein's policy of introducing to this public neglected operas and by a brilliant display of his liberality in presenting a novelty. The work brought forward Monday evening was Herodiade, opera in four acts, book by Milliet and Gremont, music by Jules Massenet. The production was splendid in its apparel and of high achievement in its musical and histrionic features. It dazzled the eye and beguiled the ear. More than this, it seems, is not required of the popular type of opera today. After the third act Mr. Hammerstein was dragged before the curtain to make his usual first-night speech. He said: "I do not know why I should be made to speak. I will do the best I can this season for the love of the cause, the love of music and the love of you people for me. I thank you." Under the usual inspiration of Will Guard, the general press representative for Mr. Hammerstein, every newspaper in New York and other Eastern cities gave up a great deal of space to the opening night, even to giving long lists of the notable society men and women who were present. * * *

Another of those dainty little English musical comedies got through the Custom House without being torn apart, some time since summer, and served to introduce Frank Daniels and his two trained eyebrows at Daly's Theatre last week. This one is called The Belle of Brittany, and although it bears the same unmistakable made in England label on every scene and musical number and departs in no wise from the established order of English musical comedy in general, it proved to be a thoroughly pleasant evening's entertainment, just as some of its predecessors, such as The Three Little Maids did. Without any definite information on the subject it seems more than a good guess that the part of the star and the aforementioned trained eyebrows have been added to and built up by local talent. One can hardly imagine an Englishman playing the part that Mr. Daniels did. But in this case the addition only increases the hilarity of the piece, so probably it is better than it was when it was seen across the water. Next to Mr. Daniels, Miss Elsa Ryan took away most of the honors. Her song about the dairymaid was easily the most popular number, unless it may be the dance which she and Martin Brown did together near the end of the last act. Miss Winnie O'Connor had the principal feminine role. Frank Rushworth, George M. Graham, Daisy Dumont and Frances Kennedy had the other important parts. A chorus of girls who could sing well and dance gracefully added the "classy" touch which the producers seem to accomplish better across the water than they do here. * * * The Metropolitan Opera Company opened its season last Monday night with a performance of Manon at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn. Miss Geraldine Farrar as Manon and Carl Jörn as Des Grieux were recalled again and again at the end of the third act. The audience was at all times generous with applause. Others of the cast were Georges Regis, formerly of the Paris Opera, who made his debut here in the part of Guillot; Henry Dutilloy, who also made his first appearance in this country as Lescart; Giulio Rossi as the Comte

The Garden at night seemed a veritable garden arranged for a fete. Then the boxes and seats were filled with women in brilliant costumes and their escorts in somber black. The ring promenade was thronged with folks gazing alternately at the fashionables and the horses; the railbirds hung four deep along the ring, intent only on the showing and judging of the horses; the band played Madame Butterfly, and the National Horse Show of 1909 was a big success. And, oh! what a hit the big John L. Sullivan horses made in harness! * * * John Mason and company, presenting Augustus Thon's fine play, The Witching Hour began a two weeks' engagement in the Academy of Music on last Monday evening under favorable auspices.

The Orpheum

Next week Jon B. Hymer and a company of ten people will present an interesting novelty entitled The Devil and Tom Walker, the action of which takes place in the throne room of the Satanic Majesty in Hades. The Devil pays a visit to earth and Tom Walker, an old darkey from Tennessee who has just arrived down the brimstone chute, is made viceroys during his absence. Tom encounters several of his earthly associates and proceeds to mete out what he considers to be adequate punishments to them, the result of which is great diversion and many funny situations. Mr. Hymer's support will include Elsie Kent, Lucille Johnston, David Walters, George Davies, Fred W. Hoon and others. Ben Welch, the character comedian, will at the opening of his performance introduce the rough low caste but extremely witty Hebrew who inhabits the lower side in New York. Welch quickly changes from this role to the Italian laborer of the familiar order. Vittoria and Giorgetta, equilibrists, not only dance on the hands, but adjust boxing gloves to their feet, and while balancing on their hands go through a pugilistic bout that is very ludicrous. Katchen Loisset, an Orpheum importation, comes here for the first time with a novel offering. She begins with English and German songs and subsequently introduces her trained pigeons and a remarkable dog called Honey, who she dresses to represent different types of men. Next week will be the last of the De Haven Sextette and Sydney C. Gibson, Howard's Musical Shetlands and Comedy Cames, Milt Wood, the dancer with the chair, and Edwin Stevens. The latter will, with the assistance of Tina Marshall, present his delightful entertainment An Evening With Dickens. The performance will terminate with a novel series of motion pictures.

Valecia Theatre

The verdict on all sides regarding the R. C. Caton comedy, Mr. Hopkinson, with Dallas Welford, the originator, in the title role, is that it is more than amusing. It is literally a screaming hit, a new stage creation, practically without a flaw, dealing on a subject that cuts deep into the daily life of impoverished titled aristocracy. The plot is of the most interesting nature, brim full of comic situation. The Duke and Duchess of Braceborough have on their hands Lady Thyra Egglesby, whose father, the Earl of Addleton, expects her to marry off well. The Earl bids a mortgage on the Braceborough's castle, and since he becomes rather ugly about foreclosing it, the dual couple find it necessary to take steps to find a moneyed match for Lady Thyra. Through the suggestion of the Hon. Otho Dursingham, Mr. Hopkinson is brought on the field as a suitor for Thyra's hand. Hopkinson was formerly a clerk and then a bookkeeper in a shop in Upper Tooting, and he has the manners of his kind. But he has inherited an enormous fortune and the Honorable Otho is ready to help him spend it under the guise of introducing him into society. He suggests that Hopkinson would do for Lady Thyra and the match is so arranged. But "Hoppy" has engaged himself to a milliner's assistant, Elisa Dibbs, and she turns up as an applicant for the position of Lady Thyra's maid. This produces the necessary complications that are worked out in a masterly fashion by the author. The second and last week of Mr. Hopkinson begins this Sunday evening. The only matinees will be given on Thanksgiving, Thursday and Saturday. Sunday night, Nov. 28, Charles Cherry will begin an engagement limited to one week in Clyde Fitch's powerful play, The Bachelor, which comes direct and intact from the Maxine Elliott Theatre, New York City.

Alcazar Theatre

One of the most recent of David Belasco's successes, The Warrens of Virginia, will be given its first production west of Chicago, commencing next Monday evening. It is a drama of civil war times written by William C. De Mille, and after running 300 nights in New York it was one of the most profitable attractions on the road last season. As may be deduced from its title, The Warrens of Virginia treats of a Southern family, that of General "Buck" Warren of Robert E. Lee's staff. The play is in four acts and the plot revolves about a trick of false dispatches by means of which General Warren is deluded into directing a supply train, the final hope of the Confederates, into taking the road to an ambush. There is a Federal lieutenant who loves Agatha, Warren's daughter, and his call at her home as an invited guest is the means of placing the misleading documents in her father's hands. The device leads into situations of dramatic suspense and poignant effect, with the love affair and the fate of Lee's army in the balance during the second and third acts, and the final episode taking place five years after peace has been proclaimed. It has many Belascoan touches, the memory of Appomattox and the surrender that was at once the most glorious and the saddest event in the nation's history. They are fine and impressive touches, woven into romance and emphasizing with the artifices that glorifies a play that is ennobling because of the infinite tenderness of its characters and the inspiring truth of its story. All of the Alcazar players and many supernumeraries will be employed in the cast. Evelyn Vaughan is to have the role of Agatha Warren, and John Ince will be seen to advantage as her Northern wooer. Howard Hickman promises to give a memorable impersonation of General Warren, who is feared by the enemy while he is sick almost to death, who fights nobly and loyally in the field, giving and asking no

VICKSBURG, Nov. 6.—Mary's Lamb, adapted, written, composed and generally promoted by Richard Carle, more than half filled the Walnut Street Theatre. The piece, styled a musical gambol in three acts, scintillated with the spontaneity and magnetism of the star. Carle is a capital entertainer, has the easy knack of making friends by literally pulling them over the footlights and shaking hands individually. There are no dull moments in the play, the humor being both bright and breezy. Particularly pleasing are the musical selections, nearly all of which are soothing and infectious, especially Betsy's the Belle of the Bathers, My Madagascar Maid, and I Idolize Ida, the melodies of which haunt one long after the final curtain. The supporting cast was strong. Adele Rafter, playing opposite to the star, gratifies fully by her handsome stage presence and easy naturalness. Julia Ralph, as Mrs. Lamb, draws the fire of favorable criticism from her intelligent rendition of the part. Violet Seaton is the vocalist of the company. Her voice is sweet and flexible and called for well merited applause. Rita Stanwood can rightfully be classed among the stage beauties. Her part was limited, but she will never be overlooked in distributing favors. The male roles were all cleverly taken, extended notice being due Geo. Bogues, Sylvain Langlois and Jos. O. Coffman. The chorus was noticeably Carlesque, pretty and animated. All in all, Mary's Lamb is one of the most entertaining musical comedies of the period and should not be missed.

Fannie Ward has scored heavily in the emotional role of Muriel Van Allen in the new play, Van Allen's Wife, by Forrest Halsey and Lee Arthur, the first performance of which was given in Rochester last week. Heretofore Miss Ward has played only the lighter dramatic roles before American audiences, but in London, where she has appeared in heavier roles, a brilliant future was predicted for her by the critics. Van Allen's Wife is well staged. In the effective cast are H. Reeves-Smith, John Dean, Romaine Callender, Erral Dunbar, Henry Duggan, Margaret Fuller and Janet Slater.

Klaw & Erlanger's latest production, The Silver Star, with Adeline Gence, the dancer, in the leading role, has scored an emphatic success at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York City.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The much heralded New Theatre has been opened. The prices are from $2 down to 50c, or those prevailing in all first class theatres in this city. The idea is backed by ample capital to make artistic successes of productions regardless of expense. The first production was on Monday night, the bill being Antony and Cleopatra, with E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe in the name parts. On Thursday Chas. Knoblanck's comedy, A College in Air, was produced. A dress rehearsal had been held on the previous Saturday night. Some of the critics seemed to find fault with the acoustics of the house. Others thought the stock company had not been long enough in training. Each local paper gave columns to descriptions and pictures of the beautiful building. Of the opening performance the Times said in part: "Whatever the ultimate effect of The New Theatre's production of Antony and Cleopatra, there can be no two opinions about the difficulty of the task in this its initial enterprise, the generous spirit in which it was approached, and the earnestness with which the effort has been made. The theatre itself is a delight to the eye, even if, as appeared on the opening night, something yet remains to be accomplished to bring complete satisfaction to the ear; it is rich in detailed comfort, and in every sense equals, if it does not surpass, the promise that the founders made. It provides, in other words, a playhouse which if not superior in beauty and appointments to the great state endowed theatres abroad, is yet the peer of any of them in solidity of construction, beauty of design and splendor of decoration; it is an institution of which the city may be distinctly proud, and deserves liberal patronage and encouragement at the outset. There was less complaint of the acoustics last night than at the general rehearsal, but some changes will probably be necessary before the theatre is completely satisfying in this respect. And the question of whether the house is not too large for modern drama and more intimate comedy may not well be decided until experiments have been made. The task has been a large one, and, in all fairness, patience should prevail until the initial problems have been overcome. This, too, in spite of the fact that the net result of its first production is disappointment. Spectacularly and histrionically much more might have been accomplished. The effort to avoid excessive elaboration has occasionally resulted in an underemphasis of what might have been more pictorially effective." * * * The regular season opera at the Manhattan Opera House opened last Monday night amid demonstrations of general pleasure. Mr. Hammerstein's auditorium was occupied by a large and appropriately clad assemblage which applauded warmly the production of the evening and encouraged heartily the efforts of the singers to interpret grave thoughts. The beginning of the new season was made especially interesting by its proof of the continuance of Mr. Hammerstein's policy of introducing to this public neglected operas and by a brilliant display of his liberality in presenting a novelty. The work brought forward Monday evening was Herodiade, opera in four acts, book by Milliet and Gremont, music by Jules Massenet. The production was splendid in its apparel and of high achievement in its musical and histrionic features. It dazzled the eye and beguiled the ear. More than this, it seems, is not required of the popular type of opera today. After the third act Mr. Hammerstein was dragged before the curtain to make his usual first-night speech. He said: "I do not know why I should be made to speak. I will do the best I can this season for the love of the cause, the love of music and the love of you people for me. I thank you." Under the usual inspiration of Will Guard, the general press representative for Mr. Hammerstein, every newspaper in New York and other Eastern cities gave up a great deal of space to the opening night, even to giving long lists of the notable society men and women who were present. * * * Another of those dainty little English musical comedies got through the Custom House without being torn apart, some time since summer, and served to introduce Frank Daniels and his two trained eyebrows at Daly's Theatre last week. This one is called The Belle of Brittany, and although it bears the same unmistakable made in England label on every scene and musical number and departs in no wise from the established order of English musical comedy in general, it proved to be a thoroughly pleasant evening's entertainment, just as some of its predecessors, such as The Three Little Maids did. Without any definite information on the subject it seems more than a good guess that the part of the star and the aforementioned trained eyebrows have been added to and built up by local talent. One can hardly imagine an Englishman playing the part that Mr. Daniels did. But in this case the addition only increases the hilarity of the piece, so probably it is better than it was when it was seen across the water. Next to Mr. Daniels, Miss Elsa Ryan took away most of the honors. Her song about the dairymaid was easily the most popular number, unless it may be the dance which she and Martin Brown did together near the end of the last act. Miss Winnie O'Connor had the principal feminine role. Frank Rushworth, George M. Graham, Daisy Dumont and Frances Kennedy had the other important parts. A chorus of girls who could sing well and dance gracefully added the "classy" touch which the producers seem to accomplish better across the water than they do here. * * * The Metropolitan Opera Company opened its season last Monday night with a performance of Manon at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn. Miss Geraldine Farrar as Manon and Carl Jörn as Des Grieux were recalled again and again at the end of the third act. The audience was at all times generous with applause. Others of the cast were Georges Regis, formerly of the Paris Opera, who made his debut here in the part of Guillot; Henry Dutilloy, who also made his first appearance in this country as Lescant; Giulio Rossi as the Comte

It was his first appearance here. * * * The annual Horse Show has been going on all the week in Madison Square Garden, and served to draw visitors to the city. The Garden at night seemed a veritable garden arranged for a fete. Then the boxes and seats were filled with women in brilliant costumes and their escorts in somber black. The ring promenade was thronged with folks gazing alternately at the fashionables and the horses; the railbirds hung four deep along the ring, intent only on the showing and judging of the horses; the band played Madame Butterfly, and the National Horse Show of 1909 was a big success. And, oh! what a hit the big John L. Sullivan horses made in harness! * * * John Mason and company, presenting Augustus Thomas' fine play, The Witching Hour, began a two weeks' engagement in the Academy of Music on last Monday evening under favorable auspices.

The Orpheum

Next week John B. Hymer and a company of ten people will present an interesting novelty entitled The Devil and Tom Walker, the action of which takes place in the throne room of his Satanic Majesty in Hades. The Devil pays a visit to earth and Tom Walker an old darkey from Tennessee who has just arrived down the brimstone chute, is made viceroy during his absence. Tom encounters several of his earthly associates and proceeds to mete out what he considers to be adequate punishments to them, the result of which is great diversion and many funny situations. Mr. Hymer's support will include Elsie Kent, Lucille Johnston, David Walters, George Davies, Fred W. Hixon and others. Ben Welch, the character comedian, will at the opening of his performance introduce the rough low caste but extremely witty Hebrew who inhabits the lower side in New York. Welch quickly changes from this role to the Italian laborer of the familiar order. Vittoria and Giorgetta, equilibrists, not only dance on their hands, but adjust boxing gloves to their feet, and while balancing on their hands go through a pugilistic bout that is very ludicrous. Katchen Loisset, an Orpheum importation, comes here for the first time with a novel offering. She begins with English and German songs and subsequently introduces her trained pigeons and a remarkable dog called Honey, who she dresses to represent different types of men. Next week will be the last of the De Haven Sextette and Sydney C. Gibson, Howard's Musical Shetlands and Comedy Canines, Milt Wood, the dancer with the chair, and Edwin Stevens. The latter will, with the assistance of Tina Marshall, present his delightful entertainment An Evening With Dickens. The performance will terminate with a novel series of motion pictures.

The verdict on all sides regarding the R. C. Carton comedy, Mr. Hopkinson, with Dallas Welford, the originator, in the title role, is that it is more than amusing. It is literally a screaming hit, a new stage creation, practically without a flaw, dealing on a subject that cuts deep into the daily life of impoverished titled aristocracy. The plot is of the most interesting nature, brim full of comedy situation. The Duke and Duchess of Braceborough have on their hands Lady Thyra Eggleby, whose father, the Earl of Addleton, expects them to marry off well. The Earl holds a mortgage on the Braceborough's castle, and since he becomes rather ugly about foreclosing it the ducal couple find it necessary to take steps to find a moneyed match for Lady Thyra. Through the suggestion of the Hon. Otho Dursingham, Mr. Hopkinson is brought on the field as a suitor for Thyra's hand. Hopkinson was formerly a clerk and then a bookkeeper in a shop in Upper Tooting, and he has the manners of his kind. But he has inherited an enormous fortune and the Honorable Otho is ready to help him spend it under the guise of introducing him into society. He suggests that Hopkinson would do for Lady Thyra and the match is so arranged. But "Hoppy" has engaged himself to a milliner's assistant, Elisa Dibbs, and she turns up as an applicant for the position of Lady Thyra's maid. This produces the necessary complications that are worked out in a masterly fashion by the author. The second and last week of Mr. Hopkinson begins this Sunday evening. The only matinees will be given on Thanksgiving, Thursday and Saturday. Sunday night, Nov. 28, Charles Cherry will begin an engagement limited to one week in Clyde Fitch's powerful play, The Bachelor, which comes direct and intact from the Maxine Elliott Theatre, New York City.

Albert Hoogs Discourses on the Soul Kiss the Successful Musical Comedy

"What is essential to the turning out of a successful musical comedy?" was asked of Alfred Hoogs, business manager for The Soul Kiss company which opens at the Garrick Sunday. "There has been so much discussion on this subject by most competent producers that it would only be a waste of time for me to answer," modestly replied Mr. Hoogs. "I would like to get your views on the subject," urged the writer. "What has been your observation?" "Well," replied the theatrical man, "in musical plays theatre goes first of all expect to see a bevy of pretty girls, handsome gowns and elaborate scenery which represents the outlay of a good sized fortune." Then comes the selecting of the actors for the leading parts. Much care is exercised in this. Often a producer of a play will go to a distant city to 'get a line' on a performer for a certain part. The performer is then brought on to New York to rehearse and after a week's 'try out' may be turned out, as it is then found that a mistake has been made, and this entails additional expense in getting another person for the part. "Take for instance the attraction I represent," continued Mr. Hoogs. "For nearly a year my employers were engaged in selecting a chorus. It was hard work getting what we wanted, but we now have an aggregation of beauty that is not excelled by the Anna Held girls or any of the Broadway shows. People have no idea," cooed the theatrical man, "what it costs to stage a musical play. The attraction I am with, for instance, employed Julian Mitchell the producer, at a salary of $1,000 a week. For five weeks he rehearsed the principals and he trained the chorus. You can readily see that this represents in payments to one man the sum of $5,000. With the other expenses the sum laid out before the opening of an attraction is something enormous. Why, do you know that the cost of operating a musical play runs anywhere from $3,000 to $6,000 and over per week. I'll venture to say that you haven't got in this town half a dozen firms or industries with the expense that a big show operates under." In conclusion Mr. Hoogs said: "To carry seventy-five people around the country, such as we are doing, requires special train service, as the railroads will not carry our equipment—consisting of three baggage cars, two day coaches, two sleeping cars and a diner—as it would make the train too heavy, and they could not handle it and make time." This insight of the expense and difficulties in staging and producing a play is not generally known to the public. The writer believes that Mr. Hoogs has struck the keynote in taking the public into his confidence and should bring the performer and the theatre patron closer together.

George M. Cohan is to have a theatre of his own in New York city in the near future. The site secured is located at Forty-seventh street and Broadway. It will be known as the George M. Cohan Theatre, realizing one of the Yankee Doodle comedian's fondest ambitions.

Spotlights

A genuine dramatic treat is promised the theatre patrons of San Francisco when Arthur C. Aistons company will present As the Sun Went Down, by George D. Baker. The play is conceded by all to be one of the best stories of Western life given to the stage in recent years. While possessed of the atmosphere of that country it is not a play of sensationalism, but it is a heart story of genuine interest through which is interwoven bright and taking comedy. Each character is drawn with a master hand and the plot of the play unfolds a deeply interesting and probable story. The company, which is headed by Estha Williams, well known here for her splendid work in other plays which Manager Aiston has sent here, will be found to be a most excellent one collectively. It contains such well known people as Edwin Walter, W. A. Whitecar, Arthur E. Chatterdon, Phil Connor, Arthur W. Bentley, R. F. Sullivan, William Sexton, Jenny Dunbar, Flora Byam, Margaret Millar and several others of equal note.

The height of stage realism is said to be shown in Charles Dillinghams production of The Prima Donna, in which Fritz Scheff will be seen at the Van Ness Theatre early next month. The first act represents a cafe chantant in one of the suburbs of Paris, with the soldiers and pretty girls drinking at the tables and the variety performers going through their turns for the delectation of the audience. Although the scene occupies only a time of about six or eight minutes yet time of about six or eight minutes yet week to put it on, for he imported Maxine Verando, a concert singer, and La Noveta, a toe dancer, from Paris to give the proper atmosphere.

Some of the famous song hits in The Soul Kiss, the merry musical play coming to the Garrick, are: When the Swallows Return in the Spring, That Wasn't All, Affinity, The Human Night Key of New York, Let's Pretend, My Diabolo Beau, Very Well Then and Any Old Place in the World With You.

The Top o' the World, the newest musical comedy, carries ten of the highest pedigree collie dogs now in this country. They will be seen in the collie ballet when the Top o' the World is seen here.

Bailey and Austin, with seventy-five clever associates, the originals in The Top o' the World, the all-around year success in New York, is an early attraction in this city.

During his coming engagement here Robert Mantell will offer a massive production of King John. One hundred and seventy-five people will be on the stage in the production of Julius Caesar.

There will be a special matinee of The Talk of New York at the Van Ness Theatre on Thanksgiving.

Julian Johnson Scores a Vigorous Hit with His Play in the Burbank in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 18.—This is certainly the place to try out new plays. It would not be safe to enumerate those that have been tried out here in the last year. This week we have another one at the Burbank. It is Julian Johnson's Invasion. This play has been talked of for some time and is interesting a large number of people both for its excellence and for the fact that the author is a Los Angeles man. The new Harmonium Organ, imported from Austria, for the Los Angeles Theatre, was installed in that house last week. George Boyver supplied the idea. J. D. McHugh, doorkeeper at the Majestic Theatre, has received, from the War Department, one of the bronze congressional medals issued to men who served in the Philippines beyond the period of their original enlistment. Mr. McHugh was a member of a Nebraska regiment and served through all the trouble with the natives, as well as during the Spanish-American war. It is rumored that Frances Nordstrom and David Landow have been engaged by Mr. Morosco as new members of the Burbank stock company. Mr. Landow will play seconds. Miss Nordstrom is expected to play the leading woman's roles in six of David Belasco's productions. These people will probably join the company about December 26. William Yerance rejoins the Belasco company next week. Lovell Alice Taylor last week Thursday won the woman's amateur fencing championship of Southern California, through her defeat of Miss Gladys Wheeler. The contest took place on the stage of the institute of dramatic arts in the Majestic Theatre building. The Theatrical Treasurer's Association will hold a meeting at the Majestic Theatre Thursday night to discuss plans for another ball to be given some time in January. An actors' masked ball, with every actor and actress costumed in their favorite roles, has been suggested and will be decided upon at this meeting. Arthur Lotto, who was formerly manager of the Los Angeles Theatre, is in town on business for the Shuberts. It seems quite likely that Julian Johnson's play, Invasion, will be given a New York production, as a complete manuscript has been sent to New York City following a telegraphic request for the same. The Associated Press sent out from here a review of the play. Maude Beatty has returned to Los Angeles from Fresno, where she has been prima donna of a musical stock company. If Ferris Hartman yields to the popular demand we will have the pleasure of seeing this clever company in one of its former successes, The Love Tales of Hoffman. There have been numerous requests for the piece, but the management has not decided to yield to these as yet. Bradlee Martin, a former member of the Belasco company, will be seen soon in a sketch at the Los Angeles Theatre. James Guy Usher of the Belasco company and the composer, William T. Kahler, are writing an opera. We will hear more of it later, but great things are promised.

AUDITORIUM—Eddie Foy in Mr. Hamlet of Broadway is the attraction

at the Auditorium for the week. It is distinctly an Eddie Foy show, and as such gives him the center of the stage at all times. Eddie Foy is a real comedian and his work is of the wholesome clean variety of which we see all too little in these days. His dances are well done and the scene in which he and the company burlesque the real Hamlet is particularly well done but not over done. Mr. Hamlet of Broadway is a big hearty musical comedy and is being produced by the best company we have seen in musical comedy in many moons. The support is excellent all the way through. Belle Gold is very amusing in a soubrette role and Alfred Latell is funny as Amelia, the bear. Laura Jaffray uses her clear soprano voice to good advantage. The chorus is pretty and well costumed and the songs are catchy and well rendered. Eddie Foy is still the same fascinating fun maker that we have known before, and we can imagine nothing which he could do badly. Mr. Hamlet of Broadway is a tremendous success.

BELASCO—The Road to Yesterday holds the stage at the Belasco Theatre this week. It is the story of a young girl's dream. The scene is laid in London in 1903 and the dream takes us back to 1603. The girl is the only one who is really herself in the dream. She sees all of her friends and her family but not as she knows them. When she awakens from her dream she brings one of the characters with her. It is the young man who has been posing for her brother-in-law. He is dressed in old-fashioned togs and is just as the hero of her dream was. The end is just as we would expect it to be, but the story is all very nicely worked out and well told. The keynote to the action of the plot is found in the tradition which is said to still exist among the peasants of England and Ireland that a wish made on midsummer eve under certain conditions will be granted, and the wish holds until the next midsummer eve. Each member of the company is seen in a role for which he is particularly suited. Thais Magrane is the young American girl who does London and gets so worn out that she sleeps and also dreams the dream of the play. The work of Mr. Stone is artistic as usual, and he gives a finished picture of Kenelm Paulton. Particularly good work is done by Frank Camp, Richard Vivian, Adele Farrington and Ida Lewis. It is a good comedy and well presented.

BURBANK—Julian Johnson's war play, Invasion, is being presented for the first time on any stage by the members of Mr. Morosco's Burbank company. A detailed story of the play is impossible at this time, but it is certainly making a pronounced hit and gives promise of being one of "the" plays of the season. It is in four acts, two of which are the dream of Lieutenant Fulton Lane of the U. S. signal service. The theme of the play is the helplessness of Los Angeles, and it shows how easily an Oriental fleet could capture Southern California. Invasion is interesting, wholesome and truly American. There are to be sure some flaws in the piece, but it is a wonderful success and does the author much credit. Byron Beasley is the lieutenant and Miss Hall the daughter of the Congressman. Lovell Alice Taylor does well as the Russian secret service spy and Mr. Burton is appealing as the Congressman. Willis Marks is the Japanese servant and Henry Stockbridge and Margo Duffet are the juvenile lovers. Harry Mestayer, as the Korean spy, is excellent. He is the dominant figure in the play. It is a great play, and many rough edges that appeared on the surface at the opening performance will be worn off by the end of the week.

MASON—The Man of the Hour, George Broadhurst's political play, is again seen at the Mason. The story of the play is familiar to most, having been played at the same house last year. It deals with graft in politics. Many of the members of last year's company are also members of the present company. Arthur Maitland as Alwyn Bennet is a new member. The Alderman Phelan of Felix Haney is a very fine characterization. John Moore as the political boss is also excellent. The women of the company are not so good as the men, but as a whole the performance is more than satisfactory. It surely is a great play and is well worth seeing.

MAJESTIC—The Soul Kiss is a musical comedy by Harry B. Smith and Maurice Levi, and while it is not up to their former successes it is a brisk and tuneful performance. The story deals with a wager between Mephisto and an artist's model, who loves the sculptor, and who is willing to wager with Mephisto that her lover will remain true to her for one year. Of course he does not, and of course she falls in love with some one else, while Mephisto allows himself to fall before the graces of a little dancer. Of course Pertina, the European dancer of the "toe" variety, is the real feature of the performance and lives up to her reputation with some beautiful and clever dancing. Ben Grinnell's Mephisto is a vigorous picture of his "Satanic Majesty," and his song, There Were Actors Then, is well done. Robert Adams is the sculptor and Marie Annis makes a pretty Suzette, the model; Arthur Hull displays the best voice of the entire company, and the balance of the cast is satisfactory. An unusually large chorus does some good dancing and the scenery is most attractive, especially the picture of New York by night and the closing scene, The Hunt.

GRAND—The big Hartman company is giving a very pleasing revival of The Toreador at the Grand this week. It is the best piece of work done by the company this season, the work of Mr. Hartman himself being particularly good. He loses himself completely in the part he is portraying, that of Sammy Gigg. There is life, action and color from the first to the last curtain of this popular musical comedy. The staging is excellent and deserves special mention. Oscar Walsh is the real toreador and has opportunity to display his rich voice in several good song numbers. Other song numbers are furnished by Walter De Leon, Miss Rand, Miss Isleib and others. Walter Catlett is good as Pettifer and Joseph Fogarty is a conspirator.

Muggins Davies and Miss Hart are also seen to advantage in their respective parts. The chorus is attractively costumed and does good work with the songs.

ORPHEUM—Once again do we have an excellent bill, where each and every act brings to light an artist. It is hard to pick and choose this week, but there is certainly something to satisfy all tastes. Willie Howard's messenger boy brings us a lot of absolute enjoyment, because he is funny and because he is so ably assisted by Eugene Howard. George Bloomquest is exploiting Victor Smally's sketch, Nerve, together with a satisfactory company of four, including Miss Rubyn Thorpe. The sketch is a concise, witty tale of the ticker, filled with interest, and George Bloomquest carries it through in splendid style. Martinetti and Sylvestor in An Attempt at Suicide do things with chairs in an acrobatic manner that is as clever as it is entertaining. Ballerini's tiny trained dogs in numerous clever tricks demonstrate what wonders can be accomplished with animals through kindness. Valerie Bergere is showing to much better advantage this week in the sincere and vivid little playlet, Billie's First Love. The Tuscany Troubadors, The Glinserettes, Carlin and Clark, as the holdovers, and new motion pictures finish a bill that is splendid.

LOS ANGELES—The bill at the Los Angeles Theatre this week includes two very clever sketches. The first is called Pixley's Prodigal Parents. It is a one-act comedy presented by Mrs. Gardner and is entitled A by Mrs. Gardner Crane and company. The second sketch is by Florence Modena and Charles Gardner and is entitled A Lesson in Reform. Both of these sketches are well written and they "go." Bissonette and Newman do some acrobatic stunts. The Kentucky Maid, Flo Patterson, sings several selections and sings them well. Billy Sharpe and Beatrice Turek have a comedy song and dance number that is not out of the ordinary. Fagan and Byron also have a song and dance number that is very clever. The bill is a very satisfactory one.

FISCHER'S—Two Twins is the comedy offering of the company at Fischer's for the week. Every member of the company is seen to advantage in their respective roles, the most of the comedy being furnished by James Kelly and Harry Oakes. They are the two twins, retired plumbers. The situations are really funny but they are not overworked. The eight girls comprising the chorus do well and put plenty of snap and go into the production. Several catchy songs are interpolated. Beside those already mentioned there are in the cast Anna Robinson, Deglow Clark, Charles Fagg and Lillian Massey.

OLYMPIC—The Olympic, which was the People's Theatre, has been redecorated and fitted up, and the new lessees, Charles Alphin and Mr. Fargo, have installed their company there. The offering for the week is The Merry Maniac. It is a very tuneful skit with just enough good comedy thrown in to make it interesting. The chorus wears pretty costumes and can sing and dance too. The best of the songs are Sunbonnet Sue and My Cousin Caruso. The company in-

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 15.—The first Fitch premiere of the present theatrical season occurred here this evening at the Hyperion Theatre, when the Shuberts produced The City, a modern play of American life in three acts, the last work of the late Clyde Fitch. The cast included Walter Hampden, A. H. Stuart, Eva Vincent, Lucille Watson, Mary Nash, Tully Marshall, Geo. Howell, Helen Holmes, Edward Emery, Jane Gail, John Jos. and Fred Courtenay. The story of The City is one of the most vivid Mr. Fitch ever wrote. It contrasts life in the country with that in the city, showing that a man's character can never be fully tested until he has lived in a center of massed humanity. George Rand Jr. (Walter Hampden) falls heir to a large fortune from his father, who, although he has been respected, has practised many unfair methods. The son inherits this tendency, also the secret that his father has an illegitimate son. Rand Jr. moves to New York, where he doubles the family fortune and wins the nomination for Governor. There he learns that the illegitimate child, George Hannock (Tully Marshall) has become engaged to his sister. The girl, unable to understand her brother's opposition, declares that they have been secretly wed. The sister is sent from the room when Rand tells Hannock of his birth. When the girl returns Hannock, seeing no alternative, shoots his fiancée through the heart. The family then realizes for the first time that life in the village is not so bad after all. The author has introduced a psychological phase where he shows that Rand, although dishonest at heart, does not know it. The play has been excellently staged and each detail worked out from the last notes made by Mr. Fitch before he died in Europe.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 13.—Tulane Theatre—It is not often that New Orleans theatre-goers have a chance to witness as substantial an offering as that accorded by this week's attraction of The Servant in the House. It is a dramatic treat of intense interest and deep thought. Its story purifies and ennobles. Its dominant key is the brotherhood of man. Its dialogue is pitched in a lofty vein. At the final curtain the audience is obsessed with a satisfying serenity that is most compensating. The wholesomeness of the play's motif tends to the moral uplift by insinuation, rather than through rude shocks to the conscience. Only seven players compose the cast, but each is virile and forceful. The leading role of the drainman by Tyrone Power was an artistic triumph. Possessed of a splendid physique and commanding voice, the actor held all spellbound. Equally masterful was Wilfred Roger as the Servant. His conception of the part was brilliant. The part requires an actor of ease and intelligence, with a voice that is soulful. Mr. Roger possesses all of these to a prominent degree. The work of Geo. W. Wilson was a rare bit of dramatic excellence, and the same may be said of David Glassford as the Vicar. Jessie Glendinning was winsome and sweet as Mary, barring a frequent disposition to articulate too rapidly, which at times marred her effectiveness. Edith Crane was otherwise entirely satisfactory. She is a handsome woman and created a most favorable impression. The role of the page-boy was skilfully handled by Harold de Packer. Next week—Fritzi Scheff in The Prima Donna. Crescent Theatre—Thurston, the magician, has entertained large houses during the week. Next week—Strongheart. W. L. McConnell.

SEATTLE, Nov. 15.—MOORE—John Cort is putting on a gorgeous revival of the popular King Dodo at the Moore this week. The company is one of excellent balance, with pretty girls and sumptuous scenes. We are glad to welcome back to Seattle Eleanor Kent, who made many friends locally when she was seen at the Grand several seasons ago as prima donna with the San Francisco Opera Company. ALHAMBRA—A bright and sparkling Clyde Fitch comedy is The Bachelor, in which Charles Cherry is starring. The play opened for a week's engagement at the Alhambra last night. GRAND—The Shepherd King, which was seen all last week at the Moore Theatre, has been transferred to the Grand. The play has made a great impression on Seattle audiences and will continue to draw big crowds for the balance of the week. SEATTLE—The Russell and Drew stock company are presenting The Banker, the Thief and the Girl in a creditable manner. LOIS—The Lois players have made a daring departure from their usual lines. This week's offering is Brown of Harvard, and although the play is full of college youth and vigor, nevertheless the Lois company got away with it in a gratifying way. MAJESTIC—It is a bill of great big acts this week. Myrtle Byrne and her company present one of the greatest sharpshooting acts ever produced in vaudeville; Joe Whitehead and Flo Grierson, two great laugh makers, are on hand with a new line; Nick Long and Idalene Cotton have a dramatic skit of much power, entitled The Banker and the Thief; the three Keltons play more different musical instruments than a lot of people ever heard of; Jimmy Wall is there with a lot of black-face humor, and Les Jundts, a troupe of European equilibrists, round out the bill. ORPHEUM—The top lines on the Orpheum are divided by two of the cleverest women in vaudeville, Eva Taylor and her company in Dreamona, and dainty little Florence Bindley in her musical monologue An Afternoon at Home. Stella H. Morrisini, with her wonderful Siberian wolf hounds, is an added feature. John Birch, the man with the hats, is something unique. The four Floods are a collection of acrobatic merry-makers. Rosa Roma is a violin virtuoso of much personal charm. Myers and Rosa do a Wild West act consisting of lariat throwing and other cowboy stunts. PANTAGES—The new bill has six acts, all new. The headline feature is the Otto Fiechtl Tyrolean sextet. Fred C. Fischer and Maurice Burkhart appear in their own songs. Moore and Sinclair have a comedy sketch that is new. The three Lucifers, William, Louise and Emelie, are singing, dancing and comedy eccentricities. Crenyon, the ventriloquist, offers his blockhead family. Mlle. Emerie and Mons. Silvern have a clever trapeze and Roman ring act.

J. E. RICH.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 14.—Lew Fields is one of the most popular entertainers on the American stage, but when at the Adelphia Theatre, where he appeared as the star of a new musical piece called Old Dutch, he was, at the close of the first act called before the curtain to make a speech on Monday evening, he was so deeply affected by the enthusiasm of his greeting that he could do nothing more than utter a few words of thanks. Victor Herbert, the composer of the delightful and very sprightly music that adds so much to the enjoyment of the piece, will doubtless continue to afford to many similarly enthusiastic audiences, likewise had to come to the front to say a few words, and he, too, seemed much pleased by the warmth of the greeting. Old Dutch really has a story, and the story of itself is interesting in the variety of complications resulting from the impersonation of a wealthy and somewhat absent-minded inventor, the Old Dutch of the play, by a Viennese adventurer, who finds the pocketbook of the inventor, and carries off a deception in a hotel in Tyrol. The foreign origin of the story is quickly apparent, though Edgar Smith is credited with the book, and the source of the elimination of certain scenes and incidents and the dialogue at times is also too diffuse. However, the fact that there is a good story as the basis of the piece make such changes as may suggest themselves not difficult of accomplishment. The production is beautifully staged with some very handsome girls in the choruses, and with well-conceived color effects in the costuming to attract the eye. Alice Dovey has the principal feminine part, that of the daughter of the inventor, and she appeared very sweet in her dainty frocks. She has the principal song number, My Gipsy Sweetheart. The chorus effects with this gipsy song were excellent. John Henshaw had the role of the adventurer and with Ada Lewis he had another successful number in a song. William Raymond and Jane Grover likewise scored. That very elaborate musical show, The Jolly Bachelors, with its great array of vaudeville headliners or of musical comedy favorites in the cast, began the second week of the engagement at the Lyric. Stella Mayhew is the big hit of the show, but there are so many excellent features in the production that they may not be specified in a limited space. Emma Carus has some very pleasing songs that are bound to become popular and Elsie Fay, Josie Sadler, Topsy Siegrist are surely names with which to conjure. At the Broad Street Theatre, Maude Adams again charmed by her delightful interpretation of J. M. Barrie's Maggie Shand, in the comedy What Every Woman Knows. The production is given with the closest attention to detail and the various roles are presented with a surety of touch that makes for an ideal performance. Richard Bennett, as the thick-pated Scotch political climber, plays the leading male role with artistry, and David Torrence and others in the cast share honors. The comedy methods of G. P. Huntley, the London comedian, who has the principal part in the musical play, Kitty Gray, at the Chestnut Street Opera House, are of the kind that betoken the thorough artist, and his fun-making is never failing in the laughter that is brought. Julia Sanderson, the beautiful American girl, who has the name part in the piece, is charming, and the other principals add to the pleasure of beholders by well-presented portrayals. The music is quite pretty. The Right of Way, with Hallett Thompson as Charley Steele and P. Aug. Anderson as Joe Portugais, is continuing at the Walnut to attract the attention of audiences interested in drama of a virile sort. The company in support of the two principals is worthy of the production. Hattie Williams and company in Michael Morton's farce, Detective Sparkes at the Garrick, dominated that play with her breezy personality. The production is quite elaborate and several of the principals are particularly able players. That stirring drama of Arizona ranges and deserts, The Roundup, began an engagement at the Forrest Theatre last evening. This play had a marvelous run at the same house two seasons ago, and that its popularity has not diminished in the interval was demonstrated by the enthusiastic welcome it was accorded by an unusually large audience. CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

MARYSVILLE, Nov. 14.—Nov. 12, John Philip Sousa and his distinguished band of musicians gave a delightful concert to a large and appreciative audience. The soloists, Misses Frances and Grace Hoyt, singers, Miss Florence Hardeman, violinist, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornetist, were superb. Next Friday night Manager Frank Atkins will offer the public Pantages vaudeville, high-class circuit performers.

SAN JOSE, Nov. 16.—Monday night San Jose took a night off and welcomed Ed Redmond and his company to the Garden Theatre in great numbers. It was a town event. Mr. Redmond offered In the Bishop's Carriage, and the performance was a triumph for everybody in the cast. Myrtle Vane, as Nance Olden, won a distinct triumph, and Charlie Gunn, Kernan Cripps and Ed Redmond played the other leading parts with every success. Y.

Margaret Illington Married

Margaret Illington may now with all propriety, and with a conventional fitness of things, darn her beloved socks and proceed to raise that family of twelve. She is married now. She is Mrs. E. J. Bowes, wife of a real estate man, and the two are now at their home in Tacoma, Wash. The marriage took place in Reno, Nev., last Saturday night. It was but a day previously that she had secured her divorce from Daniel Frohman. It took place at the family residence in Reno, there being present J. H. Light, the bride's father; her mother, and James Light, her brother. Judge Schurshear officiated. Immediately following the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Bowes left for San Francisco en route to Tacoma. Bowes, until two years ago, lived in Oakland and was engaged in the real estate business there. He made a big success on going to Tacoma, but even among his closest friends was looked upon as a business man. None dreamed that he was casting matrimonial glances upon one of the brightest stars in the theatrical firmament. His name was coupled first with Margaret Illington's when she evinced a desire to darn socks and to have a Daniel judged—in a divorce court. Then he came out flat footed that Mrs. Frohman was to secure a divorce and let it be well understood that if it was in the power of heaven, hades or Edwin J. Bowes she would ultimately be his wife. He succeeded and Margaret is happy.

Dixey Company Disbands

's the result of a clash between Henry E. Dixey, star in Mary Jane's Pa, and Henry W. Savage, owner and manager of the production, the company was disbanded Saturday night of last week. Mr. Dixey has retained H. V. Mercer of Minneapolis as his attorney and has instructed him to bring a breach of contract suit for a large amount. Mr. Savage had planned to send the company to the Pacific coast and had outlined a year's booking. When the tour was shown to Mr. Dixey he remonstrated as to one night stands and refused to accept. Mr. Savage then sent word that Mr. Dixey has his customary two weeks' notice and that the company would disband. On Monday John Cort had secured the production, the route and the company, minus Dixey. In the star part Max Fegman will be seen.

Newman-Foltz Company

The success of Walter Newman and Bertha Foltz at the head of their own company has been one of the gratifying things of the present season. The company is presenting a splendid line of emotional dramas and comedies, and everywhere the public appreciation has been of the substantial kind. Walter Newman is a leading man of good looks and a fine presence, who is becoming exceedingly popular on the Coast, and the dainty charm of Miss Foltz's work is finding additional value in an emotional ability that is taking the critics by storm.

The Busy Theatrical South

A trip to the southern end of the State the first of the month disclosed a scene of great theatrical activity and much enthusiasm. In Los Angeles the stocks were doing a very pleasing business. At the Burbank and at the Belasco the attendance was all that could be desired. At the Grand, Ferris Hartman is surprising everybody by the large audiences he is attracting. At the Orpheum, Clarence Drown and his cheerfulness still reflect the big business of that house, and at the Los Angeles, the Sullivan & Considine theatre, George Boyer, a live wire, has set all tongues wagging by his great success with that heretofore dead house. The Majestic and the Mason play to good business whenever the attractions are drawing card. The cheap vaudeville houses are not as profitable as formerly. Los Angeles is still mad on moving pictures. * * * In San Diego, the town is enjoying great prosperity. At the Pickwick, Charley King and his company are playing to capacity business. At the Garrick, Jack Dodge, the most popular showman alive, and the most popular citizen of San Diego, told us that the Garrick was doing well, and that the automobile rides about the beautiful bay were still exhilarating. We later sampled one under the chaperonage of the genial Jack, in the swift car of Alex Reynolds, Jr. Mr. Reynolds is one of San Diego's leading citizens and Exalted Ruler of San Diego Lodge of Elks, and he has more than once co-operated with Jack Dodge to make visiting show people enjoy themselves. Palmer Bros. and Walter Fulkerson expect to have the new Globe Theatre ready for stock by May 1st. It will be a concrete and tile building, and will seat 1,400 people. Fred Ballien is just completing a vaudeville house across from the Isis. Manager Donellan has succeeded in building up the Queen to a big paying vaudeville house, and he has a most fashionable patronage—and thus the evidence of San Diego's growth is most convincing.

Joseph Murphy Takes a Bride at Seventy

Joseph Murphy, the veteran actor, famed for his work in Kerry Gow and other Irish plays and reputed to be worth $3,000,000, was married, Thursday, November 4th, in San Antonio, to Miss May Frymier, an actress, whose home is in Philadelphia. Murphy is 70 years old and his bride is 25. Miss Frymier is known on the stage as May Firmier. She was on a tour with Grace George in A Woman's Way. This is her second season with Grace George. Before that she was leading woman in a company headed by James J. Corbett. Joseph Murphy was born in Brooklyn in 1839. His best-known plays are Kerry Gow and Shaun Rhue. Miss Frymier played in these shows for four years. Murphy started in life as a waiter in a restaurant in Sacramento, California. The restaurant burned and Murphy went to work as a fisherman. At night he spent his time practicing with beef bones with the intention of making himself proficient in the minstrel's art. He went into minstrelsy and proved successful. Then he went into the "legitimate."

News Item in Dramatic Review Bobs Up After Six Years

"ROBERT WARWICK and Alice Wardwell joined the Allen stock company in Oroville Thursday. Both are graduates of that thriving institution, The Caldwell School of Acting, and are accounted clever people."—April 4, 1903.

The above clipping was sent us with the accompanying letter recently: SYRACUSE, Oct. 29.—THE DRAMATIC REVIEW. Dear Sir: I enclose a clipping from your paper which was sent to me and which you should most certainly correct. At the time that this article is dated I was living in Paris, France. I have been a pupil of no dramatic school, not even "The Caldwell," whatever that might be. I have never played on the Pacific coast except with Miss Katherine Grey, in the summer of 1908, and during the fall and winter of the same year at the Valencia Theatre, San Francisco. Kindly print a correction of the enclosed and oblige.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT WARWICK.

Care The Dollar Mark Co.

We gladly print the letter for the sake of the peace of mind of Robert Warwick, one of the best actors in America, and for the pleasure it gives us to do any favor for a friend—but the item is true, nevertheless. The Robert Warwick mentioned six years ago did graduate from the Caldwell School. He is an Englishman who afterwards gave up the stage. But the occurrence is interesting as it proves that a newspaper item has a more lasting value than many foolish, but unknowing people, imagine.

Nance O'Neill Replies to Shubert Injunction

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Nance O'Neill, under contract with the Shuberts, having been enjoined by legal process from rehearsing with Belasco's all-star company, her lawyers in the Supreme Court today declared that the Shuberts agreed to pay Miss O'Neill a weekly salary and a proportion of the profits, but that she received no pay when towns were "jumped" or after her losing tour in Agnes was terminated. Miss O'Neill's attorneys also declared that the Shuberts failed to place the actress before the public as agreed.

HAROLD HOLLAND will open a stock at the Grand Theatre in Reno next week. Among the leading people will be Paul Harvey and wife, Harry Stuart and Reva Raymond.

The Unique players are offering as their part of the show Cohen the Frenchman. Al Franks is Cohen and Laurell Atkins-Blair plays his wife. Hazel Salmon plays the daughter. Dawn De Lane is an eccentric maid. Herbert Cramer is a colonel and Annie Baumann his wife. Several pleasing songs are rendered during the performance, which has much to commend it. ## Van Ness Theatre

The first glimpse we have had of George Cohan's Talk of New York was furnished us on Monday night, when Victor Moore and a large and well directed company gave us a typical Cohan show. The Talk of New York is in a way a sequel to Forty Five Minutes from Broadway and introduces Kid Burns, now a rich race-track plunger, as the big smoke of New Rochelle and an aspirant for society honors. Of course, there is interwoven in the musical melange a strong story with melodramatic flavor, and there is a bewildering array of stage pictures and dancing and a fine acting company of principals. Victor Moore, who is well remembered through the medium of a vaudeville sketch at the Orpheum some years ago, is a magnetic and easy actor, who can bring out in large measure that quality that is vaguely spoken of as "heart interest." Mr. Moore makes Kid Burns, ex-prizefighter and present day gambler, a lovable creation and through the eloquent tangle of slang at his command, he never lets the audience's sympathy get away from the character. Next to this most interesting depiction by the star, Charlotte Gray in her portrayal of the young heiress in love with Kid Burns, stands out with illuminating power. Emma Littlefield is a fascinating little soubrette who can dance superbly. She made the part of Belle McFadden most enjoyable. Mae Phelps is a stunning woman who presented a strong dramatic figure of the scheming adventuress. George O'Donnell conveyed the idea of the rich Dudley Wilcox most adequately, and John Conroy gave a good account of himself in the part of Martin McFadden. William A. Williams was most likable in the juvenile part of Joe Wilcox, and Joe Smith Marba gave the necessary eccentric turns to the Willie boy part of Freddie Stevens. The chorus was admirably managed and there wasn't a slow moment in the show. It was a typical Cohan rush of merriment, melodrama, dancing and unexpected surprises.

Princess Theatre

The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer, as produced by Kolb and Dill, scored a hit and played to a full house last Thursday night, its initial performance. The piece, which is one of the best high-class comedies the funny men have played, will no doubt have a lengthy run. The production is a stupendous one and much credit must be given Kolb and Dill, who have courageously financed the show, not as the Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer as played by C. William Kolb would do, who does everything imaginable—also things never before thought of—except the spending of his money without causing sorrow to himself; but the show has been put on rather by the free spenders of a week ago—The Politicians. Kolb has with no exception the title role in the eccentric millionaire, which affords great opportunity for fun-making—and Kolb, as we all know him, lets nothing go by. Dill as the financially embarrassed German, Baron Carl Heinrich Bismark von Bierstein, is very clever, and his makeup as of old, most absurd. He keeps the Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer in hot water, as it were, forever seeking to borrow money and asking the rich gentleman, who tells everyone that he is rolling in wealth, to release the mortgage upon his (the Baron's) estate. The play centers on the ambition of the father, the Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer, for his son to marry the Lady Mildred, who by so doing would some day fall heir to the title of Lord Tryone, as successor to the young lady's parent. The son, Guy, has sailed for New York, and word is received by his father that his social balloon has "punctured," as the son refuses to marry the lady of his father's choice, and is to marry a young, pretty working-girl of New York. Hoggenheimer goes into a rage and decides to embark for America. Not wishing to cause his wife annoyance he (Hoggenheimer) says he is called upon by his "Kink" to go immediately to America to prevent a war between England and New York City. After many mishaps and adventures, the performance is brought to a happy conclusion in the summer garden of one of New York's social set, where both Hoggenheimers, father and son, are guests and meet each other. The wrong is righted, and Hoggenheimer the father is much pleased with the shop girl fiancée of his son Guy. The title proposition is smashed, and all is well. Maude Lillian Berri, as usual, is delightful. Her part as Flora Fair, the actress, is well taken, and she has several fetching songs. The part of the actress causes a difficult situation for the Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer, as it is suspected by the wife that she (Flora) is the real cause for Hoggenheimer's hurried visit to New York. In truth, the actress is smitten with the Baron, and cleverly induces Hoggenheimer, by her winsome way and magnetic eyes to release the Baron of the mortgage and, so to speak, put him on Easy Street. She then is to marry the Baron. Carlton Chase, as Ned Brandon, played no little part and sang his songs well. Percy V. Bronson, who played the part of Guy, the son, was very good and sang several successful numbers, accompanied by that petite actress, Olga Stech, as Amy Leigh, Guy's shop-girl fiancée. Ora Harris, a beautiful young woman of local prominence, made her first appearance at the Princess last night, and received a hearty welcome. Her part was small, but her song, Cupid's Auction, in the third act, scored a hit. Sydney De Grey as Lord Tryone was a convincing lord. The reputation established by Kolb and Dill for the manner in which they stage a play is very well known, and in this The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer, costumes, scenic effects and properties, are on a most elaborate scale. It will greatly amuse to witness these two eccentric comedians go through their terrible (so seemingly) hardships. Their manner of presentation is most comical and affords an evening of funmaking, excitement and laughter.

Alcazar Theatre

There are few more severe tests for the modern stock company than the playing of farce comedy. At present these forms of dramatic composition are written, if not around a certain actor with an established reputation in this particular line of work, the drama is at least cast, assuming that it is given a New York production, with people who have reputations more or less generally known from coast to coast. Such was the case with the dramatization made by Grace Livingston Furniss of Harold McGrath's celebrated novel, The Man on the Box. Henry E. Dixey, he of the mobile face and agile legs, was cast as "the man." He did the part so well that it gave that somewhat erratic actor an opportunity of once more establishing himself in the good graces of the theatre going public, and of recouping his reputation made during a decade and a half previous. Any stock actor who is assigned the role of Lieutenant Robert Warburton is bound, in the East, to be compared with Dixey, and in the West with Max Figman, who was as good in the part in his peculiar way as the inimitable Dixey was in his. But whatever risks a stock leading man and his associates are bound to run in the way of being placed in the comparative degree, the members of the Alcazar company need have no fears, for the company on Sutter street has been filling the theatre all week. John Ince makes a manly, attractive fellow out of the dashing young lieutenant, and demonstrates that he can do good comedy work and look handsome at the same time. While Ince is not temperamentally a light comedian, being manifestly more at home in stronger dramatic roles, his characterization of the jolly young officer needs have no one say, "please excuse." Evelyn Vaughan as the heroine, was charming, and while the part is one that limits her capabilities, she makes the most of it. Incidentally, some of the gowns that the leading lady at the Alcazar wears this week are marvels of the dressmaker's most intricate art. Bessie Barriscale in the small part of Nancy Warburton was extremely good. She also dresses her part well. Howard Hickman was good as the Russian diplomat, Count Karloff. Charles Dow Clark, whose versatility seems to have no limit, was a convincing police judge. He looked, dressed and acted the part. George Baldwin, in a very small role, that of Officer O'Brien of the Washington, D. C., mounted police, has been one of the best things in the piece this week. The part fits Baldwin like a glove. He responds to the full limit of its demands. William Garwood was acceptable as Charles Henderson, the brother-in-law of Lieutenant Henderson. Although the character is a feeder to the principal one, Garwood does well with it. Will Walling is satisfactorily cast as Col. Annesley, a retired army officer. E. L. Bennison was good also, as Col. Raleigh, but his enunciation was defective at times, a defect that every now and then numbers some Alcazarian as its victim apparently without warning. Herbert Farjeon, although in a small role, was quite popular with the house. Walter Belasco as a French chef, Monsieur Pierre, gave to the character all the detailed attention in the way of make-up and of costuming, for which he has an established reputation. Roy Neill, as a stable boy; Grace Travers, as Mrs. Conway; and Christie McLean, were all three as excellent as their small roles demanded. The orchestra was the recipient of considerable applause. A Spanish waltz, Andalusia, was enthusiastically applauded. Altogether, The Man on the Box, as presented by the Alcazar people, is thoroughly satisfactory and in no way disappointing.

Garrick Theatre

The Three Twins will close its engagement tonight, to be succeeded by The Shepherd King.

Valencia Theatre

Mr. Hopkinson is here—and he is the most excruciatingly funny little chap that has appeared on our local stage. The farce, a typical London affair, rambles along fairly well until the comedian appears, and then it is all off with decorum—and we give ourselves up to one yell of glee after another. Dallas Welford makes the suddenly rich Mr. Hopkinson one of the most laugh-provoking figures imaginable, and he achieves this end by purely legitimate methods. Mr. Welford and his brand of comedy is very much to the liking of the West. Charles Wellesley plays the part of Lord Gauthorpe and is tremendously fine in the character. In addition to the splendid ability of a finished actor, he has been endowed with a tall, commanding figure and a great distinction of bearing. Galwey Herbert plays the juvenile, who comes under the spell of the fascinating Duchess of Braceborough. He has a magnetic manner and is very pleasing in the character. Warren Fabian gives a careful and satisfying impersonation of the Duke, and Frederick Powell gives to the grouchy old Earl of Addelton a strong individuality. Of the ladies of the company, nothing but praise can be said. They are strikingly good-looking, and they wear good clothes with distinctive grace. That is, Barbara Clement, who plays Thyra, and Jane Wheatley, who plays the Duchess, do. These two ladies are splendid actresses, and Miss Wheatley, in particular, presents the character of her Grace of Braceborough as to the manner born. May Milloy, who was entrusted with the part of the servant, Eliza Dibb, is a fine little comedienne and won great success in the part. Every theatregoer in San Francisco should not fail to see Mr. Hopkinson.

T. M. A. Memorial Services

The second annual memorial service of San Francisco Lodge, No. 21, Theatrical Mechanical Association of United States and Canada was held Wednesday, November 17th, at 10:30 a. m., at the American Theatre. The service was impressive and interesting and a large audience was present.

Once more Fresno has demonstrated that she cannot support two stocks. The musical comedy company that filled in several weeks at the Novelty closed Sunday night. The company was a good one, but the town wouldn't afford the necessary business.

Vaudeville

The Orpheum

The Edwin Stevens of old Tivoli fame in a playlet entitled A Busy Morning is the leading feature of this week's bill. Stevens is perfectly at home in this city and has appeared here in many roles. But now he has taken to vaudeville and this is his first appearance in San Francisco since he made a great hit in New York and throughout the East in The Devil. In his sketch this week he is very clever; the playlet is not so much in itself as it is what Stevens makes it. He is very ably supported by Tina Marshall, a dainty little woman with a quiet, original humor. Stevens scores several song hits, among them being Here's to the Girl, Boys; and his famous old song, Parie. Howard's musical Shetlands and comedy canines afford the best animal act that has been seen in this city for some time. From the playing of The Last Rose of Summer—with bells on heads—to the journeying of ropes and hoops, these ponies and dogs complete a number of astonishing feats. The act is enjoyed by all. The De Haven Sextette in a dancing operetta, The Understudy, afford a series of clever dancing and singing. The girls, who are pretty and gayly costumed, are for the most part very graceful. Milt Wood, the clog dancer with the chair, is one of the best of his kind. He jigs as well sitting down as he does when standing up. The holdover numbers include the O'Connell, Simpson act, the wild but amusingly funny pair presenting A Stormy Hour; Our Boys in Blue, who show what military tactics mean; the Tempest and Sunshine Trio; dainty maidens who afford a lot of noise; Bobby Pandur, the modern Hercules, and several reels of interesting moving pictures.

Pantages-Empire

Newhold and Carrol's bar act is up to standard. Warren and Brockaway have a very good act, but the real feature of the bill, which is not appreciated at all, is Wilson Franklyn and company with Our Dear Old Friend, Frankie Bailey, the best shaped woman on the American stage or on any stage, who for years was the biggest drawing card Weber and Fields ever had, with the exception of Lillian Russell. Miss Bailey is a dream and—well, what's the use of saying any more. Every one knows her. She is the highest salaried show girl ever in the business. She is now playing the part of the actress in Mr. Franklyn's dandy comedy sketch, My Wife Won't Let Me. The little playlet is a scream from start to finish, with good clean comedy—in fact it's the best comedy sketch seen here this season. Mr. Franklyn as Frank Rivers, vicar of St. Peter's, is exceedingly funny and clever. Mrs. Franklyn (Florence Lyndale) as Mrs. Rivers has an excellent makeup and plays the part very well. Frank Russell as Digby Grubbs presents a fine appearance and plays the reformer with effect. The Varsity Four Quartette is good with a few off notes once in a while, but outside of that you're all right, boys. Last, but not least, Consul Jr., the almost human monkey—yes, he is almost human. But why give all the credit to Consul Jr. His master deserves the credit, for he is kindness itself to Consul and never illtreats the animal; therefore Consul does anything for him. The entire show is good and the pantagescope and orchestra give excellent satisfaction.

The National

Dick and Alice McAvoy are a hit. Every one enjoys their act. John Sturgeon and company have a good act. They are good actors, a stunning looking woman playing the heavy. Miss Dalie made a great hit. Steely and Edwards present a dandy musical act with good comedy and some real singing and playing. The Kitabanzai troupe are not up to the standard of Jap acrobatic acts, although their "drop" is a work of art. Now we'll talk about Ed Gallagher, our Eddie from Frisco. His new act is one big scream from start to finish. He has given it a superb setting, but Eddie was never associated with anything that wasn't a hit. His Battle of Bay Rum is the best yet. Both he and his team mate are clever. Go see the show; you won't be sorry.

The Wigwam

The Rossiter Kids, in a musical comedy miniature, Childhood Days, are a strong feature this week and score a decided hit. Neumann, the cowboy violinist, never fails to win over the audience; and Josephine Ainsle, the dainty singing comedienne, is received as a great favorite. Lavette and Grant, an acrobatic pair, are very clever. The Beresford Company, in a howling farce, The Pantaloon Skirt, by Ulric Collins, take the audience by storm. Helen Beresford is a clever comedienne and a beautiful woman. She makes lots of sport in an original style and is ably supported by Ulric Collins as the wayward husband who learns a thing or two. The part of Lazette, the French maid, is very well taken by the petite young woman who assists the "pantaloon" girl to bring about a happy and jovial ending to the playlet. The remainder of the performance consists of Spaulding and Dupree; the Stellings, and several reels of interesting moving pictures.

American Theatre

The American Theatre has provided a program this week, styled and conducted to meet the approval of all theatregoers. The features of the show have wonderfully improved and the entire bill interests and holds the audience. The Five Lovelands in their musical sketch, The Sweetest Story Ever Told, lead the line of features. The younger woman of this company, manifestly the star, is a violinist of some note, and her interpretation of several selections are remarkably well given. Irma Orbasany's trained cockatoos perform some wonderful feats, much to the amusement of the audience. The birds seem to be enchanted by the bright lights and the noise especially made for their act by the audience. With Dorothy Vaughan, a comedienne of quality, the gallery gods burst forth into a volume of shrieks and whistles and everyone laughs with her to the chorus of a hit Make Me Laugh. Wm. Cahill is a monologist of merit, and with his wit and humor brings down the

Vaudeville Notes

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Emmett write: Portland, Or., Nov. 12—Dear RE-view: We had a successful season playing the big vaudeville houses in the East and will soon be back in California again. Last week we played the Orpheum, Seattle, and this week are meeting with tremendous success at the Orpheum, Portland, making our eighth week here, and last week was our twenty-sixth week in Seattle in six seasons. Each week we get hold of a REVIEW and enjoy your newsy theatrical tidings as much as of yore. Yours truly, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh J. Emmett.

Jack Golden and company leave to-day for a six weeks' engagement at the Orpheum, Honolulu. The com-pany consists of Jack Golden and wife, Charles Wheeler, Sarah Edwards, Mr. Williams, Alene Johnson and Earl Kiter, principals.

A New York vaudeville publica-tion is authority for the statement that William Morris is not satisfied with New Orleans and may close his house there in two weeks.

A. S. Randolph, a Chicago vaude-ville performer, known as the "Hand-cuff King," who is in jail in Sheridan, Wyo., charged with attacking a the-atre manager, proved his ability on Wednesday when he freed himself and five other prisoners from the county jail. The escaping prisoners were seen by a deputy sheriff as they were leaving the jail and were recaptured.

Harry Leavitt writes from Seattle that he is going to remain and go into business, either in New York or Pitts-burg. He will open a large booking office in either of the above mentioned places and will leave Seattle on or about the 25th of this month.

Ulric B. Collins

Ulric Collins, who has been prominently identified with Brady & Grismer for a number of years past as a stage director and leading man, is now enjoying a vacation in California by appearing with Helen Beresford and company in vaudeville in one of Mr. Collins' playlets. Mr. Collins has quite a number of dramas to his credit and proposes to devote much time in the future to playlets for vaudeville. In this line he has been exceedingly successful.

Seeley Has Started the William Morris Music Hall

It will be one of the finest playhouses in San Francisco, the American Music Hall to be erected immediately by the William Morris Company Western on the Ellis street property abutting the Orpheum. The building will cost over $250,000. The structure will be strictly class A with modern large stores on both sides of the entrance. There will probably be a first-class cafe in the basement. It is planned to make the theatre as roomy as possible. Wide aisles, promenades, smoking room, and ladies' retiring room are some of the features. E. C. Horn & Sons, who have built more than fifty theatres in this country, will come out from New York to erect the playhouse. Ground will be broken before the first of December and the work rushed to completion before the first of July. Thus have Walter Hoff Seeley's labors begun to bear fruit.

Persse-Mason Company Going South

The Persse-Mason Opera Company opens on the 24th in Ventura on their way to Texas, with Charley Walker ahead and Eddie Mowry second man. The show plays the Majestic Theatre, Los Angeles, the week of November 28, and then jumps almost direct to Arizona. This is one of the best shows ever seen on the Coast, and the handicap of no paper having now been overcome the company should experience good business.

At the same time she is chaperoning Miss Mary Agnes Cohan, known as the Yankee Princess, who has just passed the advanced age of four months. DOROTHY RUSSELL, daughter of Lillian Russell, who is now visiting in Pasadena, has decided to become an Oriental princess. She admitted on Monday night that she is engaged to Acki Sumutru, "Prince Mutsuhito," a nephew of the Emperor of Japan. She is waiting in Pasadena, accompanied by Miss M. A. Driscoll, who is to act as her chaperon, she says, until she becomes "Princess Mutsuhito." The Prince has sailed from Japan, and the wedding is expected to follow his arrival. The romance, Miss Russell says, began when the Prince was a student at Yale.

Florence Oakley is in Her Closing Week in Oakland

A clever company with Mark Smith and Miriam Nesbit at its head gave a good performance of The Traveling Salesman, 15, at The Macdonough. It is a good wholesome play and depicts the life and methods of the American drummer to perfection. The play will be given four performances and then the pictures of the Johnson-Ketchell fight. There is considerable sentiment attached to this week's offering at the Liberty. The Rose of the Rancho. Not only is it the last appearance of our popular idol, Florence Oakley, but it was here at this playhouse that Richard Tully's great Californian play was first presented, and it was Manager Bishop who first gave the young author an opportunity of showing the public what a meritorious play was The Rose of the Rancho, or as it was called in those days, Juanita of San Juan. Since then it has been revised and remodeled under the guidance of David Belasco, and at the present time is recognized as one of the greatest productions of modern times. There are many fine characters in the play and some excellent opportunities are offered to the various members of the company. Sidney Ayres, as Kearney the government representative, was at his best and had a clear and intelligent conception of the role. The Mission Padre, one of the best characters of the cast, was well taken care of by Henry Shumer, his kind fatherly manner taking exceptionally well with the audience. Robert Harrison was good as Don Luis and William Wolbert made quite a hit as the Mexican mule driver. George Friend made a handsome Militiaman and was very much in evidence throughout the play. George Webster and Walter Whipple made a couple of typical land jumpers and acted well. Mina Gleason as Senora Castro, Maude Odell, her daughter, and Florence Oakley, the granddaughter, had the principal feminine roles and were efficient in every respect. Edith Lyle made a pretty and winsome Trinidad. The entire production was elaborately staged; the Mission garden in particular being a work of art. The play was given under the direction of George Webster, who is deserving of great praise for the successful production. The attendance has been taxing the capacity of the house at every performance and Manager Bishop would be wise in allowing the play to continue for a couple of weeks. Brown of Harvard next and then Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall. At the Orpheum, the educated monkey, Charles the First, is proving the most interesting feature; his skating and bicycle riding are wonderful feats and take immensely with the audiences. Mlle Bianci, the dancer, is repeating last week's hit and is the recipient of nightly ovations. The balance of the program consists of Keno, Walsh & Melrose, Seligman & Bramwell, Three Bounding Gordons, Hal Godfrey & Co., and the Bootblack Quartette. The following attractive program is being rendered to good sized audiences at the Bell: Killion & Moore, the Labakans, Edna Davenport, Elsie Crescy & Co., George Evers, Ernest Pantzer Co., and Annette Kellerman. Mme. Jomeli gave a concert at the Liberty, 17, and sang to a very appreciative and enthusiastic house. She is an artist that everyone ought to hear. Dr. Woolner, the German baritone, will give a concert at the Liberty, 24. Harrison Ford, late juvenile of the Alcazar Stock, has accepted an engagement with Bishop's players. Manager Bishop has in view several leading women to take the place made vacant by the departure of Florence Oakley. He expects to make a selection some time next week. Henry Dixie's Facing the Music, and The Judge and the Jury by Harry Cottrell and Oliver Morosco will be early productions at the Liberty.

LOUIS SCHEELINE.

Correspondence

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 12.—Bungalow Theatre (Calvin Heilig, mgr.; William Pangle, resident mgr.): The Talk of New York with Victor Moore did a good business at this house the past five nights. The play is one of the usual lively kind we are sure to receive from the facile pen of George Cohan, and the work of the company left nothing to be desired. Tonight, John Young opens in his new musical comedy, Lo. The Third Degree follows. Baker Theatre (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.): Honeymoon Trail, with Bert Baker, filled in the past week at this house, and gave satisfaction. The company was well cast, and each principal seemed to be perfectly at home in the role assigned to each. The chorus was well drilled and the costumes were first class. Commencing Sunday night, Emmett Devoy in In Dreamland. Portland Theatre (Russell & Drew, mgrs.; Frank Hood, res. mgr.)—The Taylor company are in their last week at this house, offering The Queen of the Highway. Next week the house will be dark, and it is announced that Charles Cherry in The Bachelor opens, 21st. Further announcement is made that the Shubert attractions will follow weekly until the end of the present season. Orpheum Theatre (James H. Errickson, mgr.): John B. Hymer and company in The Devil and Tom Walker are the feature act for this week, and their playlet was one of the best things of its kind we have had along short-play turns. The sketch of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Emmett, entitled An Evening at Home, was full of good things, and the acrobatic work of the Duffin-Redcay Troupe was the equal of any acrobatic act we have had at this house. Other acts making good were Ben Welch and Chassino, especially the former in his character delineations. Lyric Theatre (Keating & Flood, mgrs.): The Athon Company did well with the comedy, Whose Baby Are You, the past week. Mr. Athon played the leading male character, and Priscilla Knowles, who played opposite to him, was a good foil for his fine comedy work. Next week, At the Risk of His Life. Grand Theatre (Frank Coffinberry, mgr.): The bill offered the past week at this house, comprising the following acts, proved to be one of the best of the present season. The bill included: The Jacksons; Rosedale Four; Morris and Morton; Mlle. Martha; Bell and Caron; Harry Thompson, and Fred Bauer. Pantages Theatre (John Johnson, mgr.): The following acts were on last week's bill and averaged up well: La Belle Italia Troupe; Edythe Stanley; Shayne and King; Bunchu and Alger; Leo White; The Lavelles, and George Winfield & Co.

"A man can run a store without advertising and he can wink at a girl in the dark—but what's the use."

Charles Taylor closed Nov. 13 at the Portland Theatre after a two weeks season of melodrama. In the company were Lee Morriss, Gittus Lonsdale, Elizabeth Hale, Helen Barham, William Thorne, Verne Layton and Mamie Haslom. Edward Lawrence and Roy Walling have joined the Lyric forces. Henry McRae took out The Spoilers from here about a month ago and is doing a record-breaking business with it. Ralph Bell is with the show, also Frank McQuarrie and Herbert Ashton. There are dark rumors afloat of a stock in Tacoma, and all the actors on our little rialto are on the qui vive trying to find out some information regarding it. Leola Howard writes: "I closed a twenty weeks' engagement with the McRae company here on Nov. 7 and am taking a rest for the first time in nearly two years. The last six weeks with Mr. McRae I was doing the lead in The Spoilers, but they were going East so I closed, as I prefer the Coast. I played the party of Cherry in The Spoilers at the Baker Theatre here on a few hours' notice, but by some mistake I was billed as Grace Kern on the programme. And the critics here all gave good notices to 'Grace Kern.' With best wishes for the continued success of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW, I am, yours respectfully, Leola Howard, 395 Klickitat street." A. W. ## New York Has a Large Number of Very Brilliant Openings

NEW YORK, Nov. 21. The opening of the second season of opera at the Metropolitan Opera House under the general directorship of Giulio Gatti-Casazza was effected last week amid the brilliant surroundings which for three centuries have been regarded as essential to the prosperity of the lyric drama. To attempt a description of the pomp and circumstance of the occasion would be to rob the pages of the fashion journals and the social directory of their vital essence. Opera, to be sure, cannot thrive without the support of much wealth, and the board of directors which directs Mr. Gatti-Casazza is composed of men of high social position and almost fathomless financial means. The trend of opera in New York is altogether likely to be guided by their tastes and by those of the men, and possibly more particularly the women, with whom they associate. It is perhaps fortunate that so much of excellence is promised by this directorate and that such satisfying evidence of good intent and immediate achievement was offered by last week's opening. The chief singers in last week's performance were mostly members of last season's company. There were, however, two newcomers. These were the barytone, Andrea de Segurola, last year at the Manhattan, and Anna Meitschik. The former filled with dignity and dramatic intelligence the role of Alvisé and sang his music most commendably. Mme. Meitschik was the Cieca. She is a real contralto, whose voice is of good natural quality, especially in the lower medium. It is by no means perfectly equalized, and there was at times a strong constriction in her tone formation; but this may have been caused by nervousness. She will probably be a serviceable member of the company, for her style shows acquaintance with the lyric stage and its routine. For the benefit of all that army to which it is of deathless interest it may be said that Mr. Caruso was in excellent voice. His tones were free, steady, mellow and generally emitted without effort. He sang lyrically and appeared to have broken the yoke of the ejaculatory school for the time. He sang Cielo e mar with beautiful cantilena, just as he was wont to do in his earlier days. Mme. Destinn carried well the burden of the title role. Her delivery showed some signs of labor and her phrasing was sometimes spasmodic. But on the whole she sang very dramatically, and her impersonation had emotional beauty. Mme. Homer repeated a performance of Laura which is already favorably known to the public. Mr. Amato was the Barnaba, and a superb one he was. His noble voice was poured with glorious sonority through every phrase, and withal he sang both musically and dramatically. And thus the new season at the Metropolitan opened with a brilliant presentation of an opera of which Italy has good reason to be proud. * * * The City, the last play written by the late Clyde Fitch, had its first presentation last week at the Hyperion Theatre, New Haven, under the auspices of the Shuberts. An unusually brilliant and fashionable audience was present, and profound expressions of astonishment were advanced at the daring profanity and melodramatic effect of the murder of the heroine in the second act. Two women fainted during this sensational scene, and had to be revived by friends. The story of The City contrasts life in the country with that in the city, showing that a man's character can never be fully tested until he has lived in a centre of massed humanity. George Rand, Jr., falls heir to a large fortune from his father, who, although he has been respected, has practised many unfair methods. The son inherits this tendency, also the secret that his father has an illegitimate son. Rand, Jr., moves to New York, where he doubles the family fortune and wins the nomination for Governor. There he learns that the illegitimate child, George Hannock, has become engaged to his sister. The girl, unable to understand her brother's opposition, declares that they have been secretly wed. At this juncture of the story the playwright has resorted to the murder of the heroine. The family then realizes for the first time that life in the village is not so bad after all. The author has introduced a psychological phase in which he shows that Rand, although dishonest at heart, does not know it. Long speeches were avoided in the play, and action instead of talk is constant in the unfolding of the theme. John Emerson, long associated with the playwright, staged the play. The cast includes Walter Hampden, A. H. Stewart, Eva Vincent, Lucile Watson, Mary Nash, Tully Marshall, George Howell, Helen Holmes, Edward Emery, Jane Gail, John Jex, and Fred Courtenay. * * * The second week of the regular season at the Manhattan Opera House began last Monday with a performance of Donizetti's tuneful and melancholy Lucia di Lammermoor. The casual observer of operatic affairs will suspect that the presentation of this familiar work occasioned what is curtly described as a Tetrizzini night. Mme. Tetrizzini achieved her most lasting success in the previous season by her delivery of the florescent babblings of the demented Lucy, and it was to be expected that the populace would hurry forth at the first opportunity to hear again the extraordinary cadenza at the end of the "mad scene." Associated with the eminent coloratura singer last night were John McCormack, the Irish tenor, and Mario Sammarco, the Italian barytone. It looks as if it were Mr. Hammerstein's purpose to make of this trio a regular cast for operas of the older lyric school. If so, his design should achieve excellent results. Mr. McCormack is likely to become popular by reason of the very pretty quality of his tones and the grace of his style, while Mr. Sammarco, who is first of all things a singer, fits admirably into the scheme of the operas of the early nineteenth century. Last week's performance was heard with evident pleasure by an audience of considerable size, which expressed itself in most enthusiastic terms after the famous sextet as well as after the scene of emotional insanity. The chorus and orchestra discharged their duties efficiently. * * * James O'Neill, who is now with Viola Allen in The White Sister, celebrated his sixtieth birthday last week at the Majestic Theatre, Boston. At a luncheon given him by Miss Allen and her company he said that his one ambition was to reappear as Iago before retiring from the stage. * * * Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm was produced by Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks at the Court Square Theatre in Springfield, Mass., last week. Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin and Miss Charlotte Thompson have built the play on both of Mrs. Wiggin's Rebecca books. * * * His Name on the Door, by Frank Lord, will have its New York opening at the Bijou Theatre next Monday evening. It is a modern play in three acts of up-town and down-town New York. It had its first performance at Springfield, Mass., three weeks ago. * * * Paul H. Liebler has contracted with Charles H. Brown and Paul Tietjens, author and composer respectively, for a fantastic musical play to be produced about the first of the year. Mr. Tietjens was the composer of The Wizard of Oz, and Mr.

Al Flournoy's Notes from Minneapolis

Stepp, Mehler & King, formerly San Francisco entertainers, made their first New York appearance last week. Their act was the hit of a big bill at the Orpheum, Brooklyn. Jim Neil, Princess Theatre, Minneapolis, is meeting with great success in a series of Sol Smith Russell's plays. Business is improving rapidly. John Copidine spent several days in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and all kinds of rumors are afloat in the vaudeville field. Dustin Farnum in Cameo Kirby delighted the fair sex of Minneapolis last week at the Lyric (Shubert's). "Dusty's" a handsome brute and is "some" actor. Pretty Billie Burke in Love Watches, and James K. Hackett in "Sampson" filled the Metropolitan in the Twin Cities. Blanche Bates comes Thanksgiving week.

Strong Stock for Reno

Dorothy Russell Denies Engagement to Jap Prince

"I cannot dine out with a man twice but what all the newspapers have me married to him," said Dorothy Russell, daughter of Lillian Russell, when asked in Pasadena last Saturday if it was true she was to marry Akkri Sumutru, "Prince Mutsuhito," a nephew of the Emperor of Japan. "There is positively no truth in the report at all," she went on. "I met him two years ago when he was a student in the University of Pennsylvania, and saw quite a little of him while in New York, but I have not seen him since a year ago last April, when he returned to Japan, and I can't understand why all of the papers should begin to print stories now of an engagement between us. They have also tried to marry me to my former husband, which is also untrue, and I don't know how many other husbands I would have had, if all the newspaper reports were true," went on the young actress, as she was seated with her companion, Miss M. A. Driscoll, on the piazza of her pretty bungalow, at the Magnolia, on North Marengo Avenue. Miss Russell expects to be in Pasadena at least until after the first of the year, and perhaps longer. "No, there is no man whom I'm going to marry, at least not that I know of, but who knows, I may meet somebody out here I will marry," she went on with a twinkle in her eye. "No, that was only a joke. I came here just for a rest and expect to have a nice quiet time while I am here, enjoying this lovely climate and beautiful scenery. I might possibly take a theatrical engagement while I am out here, for it would keep me busy, and I think I would enjoy it. I was to have gone on with Joseph Brooks in The Inner Shrine the first of the year, but as that will not be ready till later I have some time at my disposal." Miss Russell is perhaps best known in vaudeville, where she played with her mother. She has recently finished an engagement with Louis Mann Paul, in The White Hand, and before that was in Piff, Paff, Pouff.

Grand Opera Circuit May Include This City

A report is current in the East that the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York has secured from Klaw & Erlanger a long lease on the Auditorium of Chicago, which is the largest theatre west of New York. If the plans mentioned in the report are carried out and the deal for the theater really consummated, it will mean that the Metropolitan Company will have a home of its own in four great cities—New York, Boston, Chicago and Paris. The company has so many contracts with great singers that some outlet is needed for their activities. This increase in the number of opera houses controlled by the Metropolitan Company is not alone for business reasons, those who discussed the reported lease declare. They say it is part of a general plan being worked out by the directors of the operatic organization to spread musical culture throughout the United States. The plan is said to be comprehensive. The acquisition of the Auditorium will not be the end. A veritable chain of houses, the story has it, will be acquired, one in San Francisco, another in Denver, another in Philadelphia and still another in St. Louis. So that there will be a "circuit" for opera, just as there is now for drama and vaudeville. The "circuit," however, is still pretty far in the future, it is believed.

Phoebe Davies Goes With Liebler's

Phoebe Davies has been engaged by Liebler and Company to play the leading woman's role in Know Thyself, in which Paul Hervieu drama Arnold Daly's starring season will be started in a few days. Miss Davies holds the odd record of having appeared in practically only three parts of importance in seventeen years. In the season of 1892-3 she became identified with Eastern theatricals, after a long period of triumphs on the Coast, playing George Gwynne in The New South, which lasted her for three seasons. Next she was the Alma Dunbar in Humanity, and in the season of 1897-8, Miss Davies created Anna Moore in Way Down East, in which character she has been seen in every part of the United States. In Know Thyself, Miss Davies has the part of Clarisse de Siberan, wife of the General de Siberan, the latter being the role for which Mr. Daly has been cast. There are only six characters in the play, and all the acts are in the same setting.

Charles B. Hanford's tour this season will again include important engagements in California, his native State.

The Orpheum

The Orpheum announces for next week a fine list of attractions. William H. Thompson will appear in a one-act play by F. D. Bond, called Pride of Regiment. Mr. Thompson has in the role of an army veteran a character peculiarly suited to his ability. He is sure of a most cordial welcome, for he has many histrionic triumphs to his credit here, the most notable one, perhaps, being the Cardinal in A Royal Family, which is one of our most delightful stage memories. He will be supported by those sterling artists, Miss Allen and Fred J. Weber. Dan Quinlan and Kellar Mack, two minstrel stars, will entertain with a skit entitled The Traveling Dentist. The Two Bobs is the sobriquet selected to announce Bob Adams and Bod Alden, two well-known and popular writers of lyrics and jingling tunes. Mr. Adams, who, in association with Mr. Hough, has written many musical successes like The Time, the Place and the Girl, A Stubborn Cinderella, A Winning Miss, The Girl Question and other La Salle Street triumphs in Chicago, is one of the Bobs, while the other, Mr. Alden, is responsible for the music of Not Because Your Hair is Curly and other catchy tunes that the whole country has whistled. comedies, will contribute to the new bill. She sings her own songs exclusively, the arrangement for them having been made by Frederick Peters. Next week will be the last of Ben Velch, Vittoria and Giorgetta, Kathleen Loisset, her pigeons and her trained dog, "Honey," and John B. Hymer and company in their great comedy hit, The Devil and Tom Walker. A new series of motion pictures will wind up one of the best entertainments in the history of vaudeville.

Valencia Theatre

The last performances of that furiously funny farce, Mr. Hopkinson, with Dallas Welford in the title role, takes place this Saturday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday night Charles Cherry, who was last seen here as Maxine Elliott's leading man, will make his first appearance in San Francisco as a star in Clyde Fitch's last comedy, The Bachelor. The story is that of a broker, who, on account of his confirmed opposition to matrimony, is known by his intimates as The Bachelor, and the first act finds him expounding his theories to a friend who is about to marry. He begins to take notice of the winsomeness of his pretty blonde stenographer, takes her to the matinee several times and to an occasional luncheon, but there his attentions discreetly stop. The strange part of it all is that he does not realize his love for the girl until her young brother, believing he must protect his sister against the "perils of a great city," and moreover the attentions of a handsome broker, informs him that he must either propose to his sister or suffer the consequences. The scene, of course, is entirely ridiculous, but the bachelor, realizing that some may think that he has compromised the girl, decides to propose. The stenographer, in the mean time, learns the part her brother has had in the affair and, although deeply in love with the bachelor, calls the engagement off. The author, however, does not allow matters to rest here, but brings the lovers together before the final curtain. The original cast will be seen here, including, in addition to the star, Ruth Maycliffe, Lillian Paige, Alice Riker, F. Percival Stevens, Charles Laito and others. The Gay Musician, Julian Edwards' latest comic opera success, with a company of seventy-five, from Wallack's Theatre, New York, will follow The Bachelor at the Valencia Theatre, Sunday night, December 5th.

Alcazar Theatre

A second week, and positively the last one this season, of The Warrens of Virginia is announced by the Alcazar management. This announcement will not surprise anyone who has witnessed the play, for that the regulation seven days' run would be exceeded was assured before the close of the initial performance. David Belasco's name, the potency of which is recognized by San Francisco's theatregoers, had much to do with drawing an unusually large first-night audience, whose verdict served to fill the house at each succeeding presentation of the play and create a demand for seats that only a second week can satisfy. But, marvelous though it is, the "atmosphering" of the play is only one component of its attractiveness. The tale unfolded is full of heart interest and intensely dramatic, and the characterization is unconventional. In the hands of the Alcazar players every impersonation more than success to convey the author's ideal. Since he became connected with the Sutter Street home of good drama, Howard Hickman has done nothing more artistic than his interpretation of General "Buck" Warren, one of the most striking figures ever staged. Evelyn Vaughan as his daughter, Will R. Walling as his rival in war, John Ince as the young Federal officer whose heart is torn in conflict between love and duty, Bessie Barriscale as the little Warren girl—in brief, every member of the excellent company, contributes to the finest performance in which they have collectively participated.

Geo. M. Cohan in The Yankee Prince

Geo. M. Cohan, who with his Royal Family and a big supporting company will present young Mr. Cohan's most successful musical comedy, The Yankee Prince at the Van Ness Theatre, San Francisco, for two weeks, commencing Monday, Nov. 29th, has written, composed and produced more than fifteen plays, eight of which are now before the public. It has often been asked, "Does Cohan ever take any rest or allow himself any amusement?" Very little. When he is on tour he works, and when he is in New York he works. He doesn't seem to get any satisfaction out of the ordinary pleasures of his associates and is seldom to be found around cafes in clubs or other resorts. He has one failing, however. Cohan likes the national game. In fact, he is a "baseball bug," and would rather see a closely contested game on the diamond than eat. Next to this he is a great admirer of the manly art and never misses a "good go" in the roped arena when one is "pulled off" in his vicinity. Mr. Cohan's working methods are as odd as are his mannerisms. He never does any writing in the daytime, preferring the quiet solitude of his studio in the wee sma' hours, when all good folks are supposed to be abed. From one a. m. till daylight are his hours for work, and when he has completed a first act it is put into rehearsal, which he superintends during the day, while he begins on the second act at night and so on.

in Paris," she said. "I love—oh, I love some one there. But I won't tell his name. I shall never marry." She beamed in the most friendly manner at the newspaper man. Then the press agent gave an important preliminary cough. "Ah—er—the prime minister of France, M. Briand, is a bachelor, is he not, Miss Garden?" Miss Garden smiled brightly. "Oh, yes," she said. "And he is just the dearest friend of mine. He is such a delightful man. He is to be my godfather when I join the Roman Catholic Church." The singer did not dwell further on the identity of the man she loves or upon her friendship for M. Briand, prime minister, but rather preferred to discuss the present emotional condition of her heart. "I have come to the conclusion that married life is not for me," she said. "My present ambition is to finish my season here, and then return to Paris and be taken into the church. If I ever marry, I shall keep the fact a secret from every one, except the man." Some one asked the truth of the cabled story that she plans to enter a convent after she has been admitted to the Catholic Church. Miss Garden laughed at that.

"How could I enter a convent and be a nun?" she asked. "And if I did that, just think of the fix all my masculine friends would be in; they would have to enter monasteries and become monks." She insisted, however, that she is thoroughly in earnest in her intention to join the Roman Catholic Church. She welcomed the reporters as old friends, and to one especially fortunate she gave the kiss of comradeship. It fairly cracked. "Do you believe in suffrage?" she was asked. The prima donna threw her head back and indulged in a very hearty laugh. "Why, no," she said. "I don't. You men have two ounces more brains than we women have, and you ought to do the voting without our aid. Besides I think there is nothing so lovely as a thoroughly feminine woman."

George M. Cohan and His Royal Americans are Making Records in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 25.—Next week will witness a new member added to the Burbank company. David Landau, Mr. Morosco's new second man, will make his first appearance in The Heir to the Hoorah. He will play heavies and juvenile leads. Mr. Morosco's new leading woman is Frances Nordstrom. She will appear first in The Girl of the Golden West, which opens Dec. 26. Helen Holmes, former leading woman at the Belasco Theatre, is in the cast of The City at the Hyperion Theatre, New Haven, Conn. Nat Goodwin is expected to spend a part of the present winter in Los Angeles. There will be several changes in the personnel of the company at Fischer's in the next two weeks. Next Monday Josephine Leroy, prima donna, and Nan Halperin, soubrette, will join the company. December 6, Dan Mason, a German comedian, will become a member of the company. Clarence Drown, manager of the Orpheum, has left with his family for a vacation trip to Honolulu. They will also make a visit to San Francisco. Jessie Mae Hall, who will be pleasantly remembered for her work with the Burbank company, is making good with the Al Trchaern company at San Antonio. Oliver Morosco telegraphed from New York yesterday that he had obtained the only authorized version of St. Elmo for early production at the Burbank Theatre. The play is a dramatization by William Holcomb of Augusta J. Evans' well known novel of the same name, the dramatic rights to which are controlled absolutely by Mr. Holcomb and his partner, Vaughan Glaser. John H. Blackwood returned from New York last night.

AUDITORIUM—The attraction at the Shubert house for the week is The Gay Musician. This is the first local presentation of the piece, although it ran in New York for a long time. It is a real comic opera, and unlike many that we see has a well defined plot. Harry Benham, who plays the title role, shares the honors with Texas Guinan, who is a charming young woman, possessed of a very excellent voice and wonderful ability as a comedienne. Lottie Kendall as the deceived and jealous wife acts well and sings attractively. Margaret Crawford plays Matilda Yager in a truly wonderful manner. It seems as if Mr. Edwards had written the part for her so well does it suit her. Freda Klingel is pleasing as Hilda Branson. Roger Gray is convincing in the part of Samuel Lyons, the theatrical manager. He has a good voice, which shows careful training. The principals and chorus dance well and sing well and the songs are catchy. The comedy is good and the whole show a real success.

BELASCO—Channing Pollock's dramatization of Miriam Michaelson's novel, In the Bishop's Carriage, is being produced by the Belasco company this week. The play itself is strong, interesting and appealing and tells a consistent story. In the main the parts are well taken.

Miss Magrane does not seem at home in the role of Nan the nipper. There is not enough of the bravado in her portrayal; she is just not suited to the part of the reckless Nan. Mr. Stone does well as William Latimer, but this is not one of his best pieces of work. Frank Camp, as Tom Dorgan the crook, does excellently. Mr. Yerance is receiving a cordial welcome this week on the event of his return to the Belasco company. He is seen to advantage in the part of Edward Ramsay. Miss Adele Farrington has the small part of Mag Monahan. Miss Lewis is Mrs. Edward Ramsay and Miss Beth Taylor plays the daughter. The balance of the company are well cast.

BURBANK—The Dairy Farm, Eleanor Merron's rural drama, is holding the boards at the Burbank. Two years ago this same play was given by the Burbank company, and many of those in that cast are appearing in the cast of the present offering. The scene of the play is laid in New York State in a farming community and tells the story of true love that does not run smooth. Everything is pleasingly settled in the last act and the wrong is made right. Mr. Beasley and Miss Hall are seen in the leading roles. Willis Marks is very real in the part of Simon Crum, the village Shylock. Harry Mestayer is Joel Whitbeck, the village peddler; Henry Stockbridge is Jehu Sparmley; Lovell Alice Taylor is very amusing as Jane Perkins; John Burton is excellent in the role of Squire Hurley; Margo Duffet, Louise Royce, David Hartford, H. S. Duffield and Frederick Gilbert are all well cast. Florence Oberle makes an ideal negro mammy. The performance is very satisfactory.

MASON—The management of the Mason is happier this week than for many moons, and Mr. Wyatt is wearing a smile that will not come off. The reason. They are actually turning people away this week, all because of George M. Cohan and his excellent company. The Yankee Prince is a great show and Cohan is greater than his show. The story is that of an American boy, Percy Springer, who wants the hand of an American girl, Evelyn Fielding. Her father wants her to sell herself to gain an English title and her mother is equally anxious that she should marry the American. The American wins in the end. Josephine Cohan is not with the present company, but her place is taken by Miss Lila Rhodes, who is dainty, pretty and a fine dancer; she also wears some beautiful gowns. Jerry and Helen Cohan, father and mother of George, play Mr. and Mrs. Fielding; Frank Hollins is the English Earl to whom Mr. Fielding wishes to marry his daughter; Tom Lewis, who has been seen before in some of the Cohan shows, is cast as Steve Daly, and Sam Ryan is the Irishman, John Fagan. The company includes twelve principals and a chorus of forty. The music is all good, but the three best numbers are I'm Awfully Strong for You, The

A-B-C's of U. S. A. and M-o-n-e-y. The Yankee Prince is the best musical comedy we have had here this season.

MAJESTIC—With the same horse race, the same pickaninny band and the same Colonel Sandusky Doolittle, comes Old Kentucky, ever welcome and always popular. Burt G. Clark is still portraying the big, ready witted Colonel, and familiarity with his role tends to make it a finished performance. Frank Dayton also returns as the rich young turfman. Joseph Slaytor as Horace Holton supplies the villainy. Mildred Johnson is a most satisfying Madge. The pickaninny band, which is to Old Kentucky what the bloodhounds are to Uncle Tom's Cabin, prove themselves equal to the occasion.

GRAND—The Hartman company is giving us a very pleasing revival of that popular Oriental musical comedy, The Chinese Honeymoon. It is a bright pretty performance with catchy music, a good looking, well drilled chorus, an up to date show. Mr. Hartman is happy in the role of Mr. Pineapple. He is extremely funny in the part. Muggins Davies is Fi Fi. Walter Catlett is seen in the part of the Lord Chancellor and Joseph Fogarty the Emperor. Josie Hart is Mrs. Pineapple. Walter De Leon has two new songs in the show. They are both very clever; one is Mamie and the other My Mother Didn't Bring Me Up That Way.

ORPHEUM—On With the Dance brings to us Mlle. Bianci, beautiful in face and figure and a superb dancer. Her interpretative dances, The Dresden China Dance, Egyptienne, La Danse en Volant and Satanella are beyond comparison. Added to the grace of her movements are her exquisite costumes, each a study in itself. "General" Ed La Vine is here on his annual visit, with his inimitable foolishness. Hal Godfrey, with his company, came from London with a sketch called The Liar. Edmund Keno, Walsh and Melrose have something new and something good in the way of gymnastics. George Bloomquist and his company are still adding to the gayety of the bill with Nerve, and the Howards as Messenger Boy and Thespians continue to amuse with their songs and parodies. Ballerini's talented dogs fill out the holdovers.

LOS ANGELES—There is good vaudeville at the Los Angeles for the current week. The bill is headed by Anna Eva Fay, telepathist. She does some stunts that are unexplainable. A novel act is furnished by Irma Orbasany's trained cockatoos. Elsie Crescy and her company appear in a skit entitled Fagin's Pupil. William Cahill furnishes a very amusing monologue and Dorothy Vaughan is a clever comedienne. Moving pictures complete the bill.

FISCHER'S—The Kelly Massey company are offering My Friend's Wife this week. James T. Kelly has a light comedy role of Bobby Wilson, and Charles Figg is cast as Richard Gardner. Miss Massey is the pretended wife of Gardner and Miss Clark, the daughter of Gardner's uncle (Harry Oakes). Anna Robinson is the young fun-making daughter. The chorus is doing some excellent work. There are several fine song numbers in the production.

OLYMPIC—A. Mutt at the R is the title of the piece being put on by the Alphin-Fargo company at the Olympic. Besides the original Mutt the cast includes his wife, Ima Mutt, Little Jeff and all the family. Dave Morris impersonates Mutt with a makeup that is truly wonderful. Jules Mendel plays the German saloonkeeper. Blossom Seeley plays the part of the French maid. Maude Rockwell portrays the female race-track fan in love with a sporting bookmaker (Richard Kipling). Rose Ledman is cast as Ima Mutt and Leonard Brisbane and Henry Auerbach are also well cast.

UNIQUE—The vaudeville part of the program at the Unique is furnished by the Earl sisters with character songs and changes, and Waldo, Devere and Gates in a comedy sketch, The Irish Eskimos. The Unique comedy company plays Neighborly Neighbors. The story is of one Lem Barlow (Al Franks), who falls in love with the daughter (Annie Baumann) of old Hawkins (Herbert Cramer). The latter has been fighting the Barlows for years to gain the possession of certain property. He finally does give his consent. Laurel Atkins-Blair, Dawn De Lane, Hazel Salmon and James Spencer all have good roles.

FLORENCE EMERY.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20.—Tulane Theatre—Fritzi Scheff in her new opera, The Prima Donna, sang herself into high favor of big houses during the week. Charles Dillingham has surrounded the star with an expensive production. The cast is large and capable, the costumes showy and costly, and the scenic effects in keeping with a high grade production. The music of the opera is tuneful, a number of selections being pretentious, while the dialogue is clean cut and witty. Brushing aside any comparisons with her vehicle when last seen here, Mlle. Modeste, there can be no question but that the artist has improved greatly in vocal attainments, taking rank as possibly the leading lyric soprano on the light opera stage. Miss Scheff's style is distinctive. She is not a stage beauty, but is full of chic and magnetism, and with her well known ability to wear gowns that are the best products of the dressmaker's art she presents a striking stage picture. John E. Hazzard is a comedian of unctious, easy methods. He knows how to sing a topical song effectively. The chorus was above the usual comic opera standards in that vocal abilities were apparent. Next week, Robert Mantell; 28, Rose Stahl. Crescent Theatre—Strongheart, with Burton L. King in the title role, played to big business. The supporting cast, particularly the male roles was strong. Next week Al. H. Wilson.

W. L. McCONNELL.

The Elleford Company had exceptional success during their Vallejo engagement last week. They played to capacity business.

NEWMAN FOLLEZ CO.—Hanford, Nov. 28-Dec. 4; Bakersfield, 5-12; Oxnard, 13-18; Los Angeles, 19-24.

Correspondence

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Nov. 15.—The Ringmaster delighted a large audience on Nov. 8. On Nov. 11, Bispham rendered a fine program, finishing with his dramatic reading of The Raven, by Edgar Allan Poe. On Nov. 12, Texas was the bill with a cast of twenty-five people. Geo. Coburn's rural musical play, Fifty Miles from Boston, was the next attraction, Nov. 13; very pleasing to a large audience. And the last of an unusually busy week was John L. Kearney, Dorothy Maynard and sixty others in the light opera, The Girl Question, also to a well-filled house. The house will be dark now for some little time. Cap and Bells, Elks' Opera House.

MARYSVILLE, Nov. 22.—Friday evening, Saturday matinee and Saturday night, Pantages' show of good people, high-class vaudeville, attractive motion pictures and a pleasant evening spent by those present. Only a fair house. Throughout the week, until Friday evening, Manager Atkins will give his patrons a chance to see beautiful motion pictures, hear good music with plenty of room and comfortable chairs, at prices to suit all—five and ten cents. On Friday night, the 26th, Pantages will again be the attraction, and on Monday night, the 29th, The Man of the Hour will be the attraction.

SAN DIEGO, Nov. 17.—Garrick (J. M. Dodge, mgr.): Nov. 14-15, Sam'l E. Rork's Land of Nod played to two good-sized houses and pleased. The company is headed this year by Niel McNeill in the part of April Fool, and is an excellent one. The chorus is well drilled and good to look upon. The costumes and scenery are good. Coming: 20, In Old Kentucky; 21, The Man of the Hour; 22, Mme. Jonelli, under auspices of the Amphion Club. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.): This week, the Charles King Stock Company are presenting The Squaw Man in a very commendable manner to packed houses every performance. Charles King, in the title role, gives a very clever and convincing interpretation. Marjorie Rambeau, as Diana, the English Girl, as usual, gets the most out of every line. In strong contrast to Diana is Nat-uritch, Carson's squaw wife. Auda Due had a clear conception of the part and won the enthusiastic approval of the audience. Louis Morrison, as Big Bill, Carsons foreman, gave his usual excellent portrayal. Pietro Sosso, as Cash Hawkins, and J. Franklyn McDonald, as the Indian chief, also handled their respective parts in a satisfactory manner. The balance of the company gave excellent support. The scenery and costumes were correct to every little detail. Queen (John Donnellan, mgr.): The Queen has a good bill this week, which is composed of the following acts: Grevini and Selbinin have a varied act that seemed to please as well as anything on the bill. They play several musical instruments, juggle and have an excellent acrobatic stunt which elicited them much applause. Their juggling is also worthy of mention. Marion and Rial have a novel playlet entitled The Witches Power, which went big. Ernest Brinkman pleased with his singing act. The Four Stagpooles, in their Crazy Caddie Act, scored a bit hit. It is a rough and tumble act, full of clever acrobatic feats. LUNDQUIST.

SAN DIEGO, Nov. 24.—Garrick (J. M. Dodge, mgr.): Nov. 20, In Old Kentucky played here for the 'steenth time to a packed house, but failed to arouse the enthusiasm of past years; 21, The Man of the Hour was presented by a mediocre company to fair business; 22, Mme. Jonelli in recital pleased a large and fashionable audience. The Garrick will remain dark until December 5, when the Three Twins will play an engagement of two nights. Bailey and Austin in The Top o' the World, David Warfield in The Music Master and Florence Gear in Fluffy Ruffles are among the December bookings. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.): This week Charles King and his excellent company are putting on Held by the Enemy to big business. The piece is replete with thrilling situations and all members of the company are giving a good account of themselves. Miss Marjorie Rambeau as Rachael McCreery, the beautiful Southern girl, has a good part and gives her usual excellent interpretation. Miss Rambeau's naturalness and clear conception of the many parts she portrays will always win her the plaudits of the critics. Mr. King as Colonel Prescott enacts his part in such a way as to win the enthusiastic approval of the audience. Pietro Sosso as Lieutenant Haynes doesn't have a great deal to do, but he makes the most of every minute he is on the stag. Ernest Van Pelt makes a very acceptable newspaper artist and lends a welcome touch of comedy to the production. Harry E. Williard as Uncle Rufus, McCreery's colored butler, has a clear conception of the part. Auda Due as Susan McCreery, and Lillian Burnett as Euphemia McCreery, gave excellent portrayals. The production is well staged. QUEEN (John Donnellan, mgr.): The bill as presented this week is hardly up to the Sullivan and Considine standard. Bissonette and Newman open the show with a hand balancing act that is ordinary. An act of this kind nowadays has to contain something new and original to make much of a hit. Flo Patterson, the Kentucky Maid, has a fair singing act. Her act would have gone better here if she was not handicapped with a bad cold. Miss Florence Modena and Charles Gardner in sketch, A Lesson in Reform, seemed to please better than anything else on the bill. Fagon and Byron in bits of musical comedy have a good act that went well. The act is very well dressed. Next week, Anna Eva Fay. Empire, Bijou and Union report good business, with motion pictures and illustrated songs. LUNDQUIST.

TACOMA, Wash., Nov. 19.—King Dodo appeared at the Tacoma Theatre, Nov. 10th and 11th and returns, 21st. This tuneful musical comedy is still popular and found much favor. William Friend, Eleanor Kent, Louise Mink and Zoe Barnett were all acceptable in their roles. Nov. 14-15, The Honeymoon Trail, without much plot, but full of laughs, drew well. Bert Baker and Louis Kelso are new here, and so was their "business," which, with several other features that were fresh and original, seemed to please everybody. Louis George appeared to advantage in a German character not unlike the one he had in The Girl Question last season. Margaret Loftus, Ailine Boling, Edna Holtzman and Mabel Potter contributed materially to the success of the production, which was well staged. George Hamlin appeared in song recital, Nov. 16, before a large and fashionable audience. The program varied in numbers was an enjoyable one. Coming: Nov. 23-24, Wright Lorimer in The Shepherd King; 25, Mark Smith in The Traveling Salesman; Christmas attraction, The Soul Kiss. E. J. Bowes, prominent club and society man and vice-president of the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce, was married on Nov. 13 to Margaret Illington. Mr. and Mrs. Bowes are now at home, where Mr. Bowes has leased a beautiful home on North Yakima Avenue, in the heart of the fashionable residence section. Eddie Redway, here last season in Babes in Toyland, will appear at the Pantages next week.

A. H. NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 20.—King of Cadonia, a new English musical play, book by Frederick Lonsdale, lyrics by Adrian Ross, and score by Sidney Jones, composer of The Geisha, was introduced to America this evening at the Hyperion Theatre by the Shuberts. In point of humor the piece is decidedly in advance of the average London musical comedy, and what is even more gratifying, the Shuberts have improved upon the magnificent coronation scene in the last act. William Norris was seen in the principal role, that of the Duke of Alasia. The cast includes, Wm. Norris, Melville Stewart, Clara Palmer, Gertrude Darrell, Mabella Baker, Albert Gran, Burrell Barbaretto, Donald Buchanan, William Davis, R. R. Neil, Jr., St. Clair Bayfield, Vincent Dusenberry, Mabel Weeks, Addie Marze, Rose Firestone and Carolyn Armstrong.

PORTLAND, Or., Nov. 22.—It is with the deepest regret that I must tell the readers of The Dramatic Review that death called from our midst last week James H. Erickson, manager of the Portland Orpheum. Jim Erickson, as he was affectionately known to all his friends, came to this city with the introduction of Sullivan & Considine into the theatrical life of Portland, and was the manager of the Grand for several years until he was given charge of the Orpheum and the Sullivan & Considine interests in Portland. He was a man quick to make friends, and after he made one he was never known to have lost the esteem and love of that person. Always happy and of a jovial mood, he was truly one of God's noblemen. At the time of his death he was in his thirty-sixth year. The funeral was held last Friday and was attended by hundreds. The floral pieces have never been excelled in this city. His death is mourned not only in this city but in many places throughout the United States many an actor and actress will have kind words to say upon hearing of the death of James Erickson. Heilig (Calvin Heilig, mgr., Wm. Pangle, res. mgr.)—Another one of James Forbes' plays struck this town yesterday and opened at this house. It is labeled The Traveling Salesman. While it cannot be truthfully said that it is the equal of his other play, The Chorus Lady, still the play is delightful, and by the way funny enough to satisfy the most fastidious. Mark Smith is the drummer in the present bill and succeeded in making a home run with the audience from the jump off. Beth Elliott is the heroine and sustained herself in the part admirably. The balance of the company was good. Coming, Wright Lorimer in The Shepherd King. Baker (George L. Baker, mgr., Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Lena Rivers is this week's bill and the old time story drew packed houses yesterday. Emma Bunting is playing the title role, and is an actress of great emotional powers. She was good in the prologue in the role of the country girl, and when later she was called upon to show her emotional work she had many in the audience sobbing. The supporting company was adequate. Next week this house is devoted to local talent, and the following week Forty-five Minutes From Broadway is announced. Portland (Russell & Drew, mgrs.)—This house reopened last night with a Shubert attraction, The Bachelor. From this time on it is announced that only Shubert bookings will be found at this theatre. Also with the reopening came a change in the management, Frank Hood, who was in charge for Russell & Drew, having resigned, and Dad Russell himself is at the helm for the present. In The Bachelor Clyde Fitch has written an offset for his play, Girls, but be it said to his credit that in their present production the playwright has written a play closer to life than in Girls. Charles Cherry is cast in the title part and he is a finished actor in every meaning of that word. He reads his lines well and gives the idea to one that he is sincere, and hits the right spot with his audience. Ruth Maycliffe has the leading role of the feminine contingency and left nothing to be desired. Next week, Mr. Hopkinson. Orpheum (John F. Cordray, act. mgr.)—It is announced today that John F. Cordray will assume the management of this house, the vacancy being caused by the death of James H. Erickson. Last week's bill was headed by William H. Thompson and company in The Pride of the Regiment. The play was a hit and the character work of Mr. Thompson was up to the high standard we expected. Adams and Adams had a very entertaining skit, and Mabel McCane in her songs was well received. This week's bill: Florence Bindley and company, Eva Taylor and company, Stella Morisini, Rosa Roma, Four Floods, John Birch and Meyers and Rosa. Lyric (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown is this week's offering and the farce went well at yesterday's productions. The company is well cast and the interpolated specialties added to the enjoyment of the performances. Robert Athon and Priscilla Knowles both gave fine presentations of the leading parts, and the comedy work of both was well received. Dorothy Davis in a small role gives a good piece of character work, and William Howard, who alternates in the leads with Mr. Athon, played his assignment in tiptop style. Grand (Frank Coffinberry, mgr.)—This week's bill includes Tom Linton and his jungle maids; Rusticana Trio; W. G. Hoefler; Von Mitzel and Maynard; Josephine Gassman; Inza and Lorella and Fred Bauer. Pantages (John Johnson, mgrs.)—The following acts are announced for this week: Captain Stonewall's educated seals; Golden and Ardith; W. S. Harvey and company, Swift and Casey; Leo White; Glen Burt; Jarvis, Mann and Jurenda. A. A. W.

SEATTLE, Nov. 22.—Moore—Charles Klein's wonderful play, The Third Degree, was greeted with enthusiasm by last night's big audience and Fernanda Eliscu was given nothing short of an ovation. This little, dark woman dominates the whole play, and her interpretation of the part of Annie Jeffries, the devoted wife, is a revelation of artistic acting. The play will run for the balance of the week. Alhambra—Dark. Grand—The Honeymoon Trail led to the Grand yesterday to the delight of Grand patrons. As a novelty musical comedy it is a success. There are laughs a plenty and the music is all that could be desired. Seattle—The Seattle players are telling the reason to every one's satisfaction in Why He Divorced Her." It is a play of contrasts between riches and poverty, with an exceedingly complex plot, but everything comes out right in the end. Lois—When Knighthood Was in Flower is the offering of the Lawrence players and it is given in a thoroughly delightful manner. Miss Kelton as Mary Tudor is doing excellent work. Orpheum—It is in many ways a remarkable bill at the Orpheum Theatre. The headliner is Donald Bowles with his company in Guilty, a playlet written by Victor Smalley. The Klein family are an imported troupe of comedy cyclists; White and Perry are two famous funmakers; Harry Fox and the Millership sisters are the most agile trio in vaudeville, and Eva Williams and Jack Tucker are loaded up with a scream. The great Ciccio is "king of the wire" and Carl Nobel is the world's greatest ventriloquist. Majestic—Delmore and Lee defy death in an aerial act, and Hill and Sylvian show some marvelous stunts on the unicycle. The Bohemian sextet is a troupe of continentally trained opera singers. Trainor and Dale have an interesting skit. Memories of the War and Kathlyn de Voie, prima donna comedienne, has a repertoire of tuneful songs. Pantages—Heading the bill is one of the greatest acts in vaudeville. It is the Florenz troupe of society acrobats. There are two women and four men in the act. The other acts are Schrodes and Chappelle in a clever sketch; the four American gypsy girls, in musical selections; Howard and Lewis in The Singer and the Dutchman; Nip and Tuck, acrobatic pantomimists; Muriel Ardmore, the violinist, and Helen Lowe with her pretty songs.

MARYSVILLE, Nov. 23.—The Grand Theatre, which has been reopened under the management of Al White, started off Monday with a fine show, given by Dillon and King's Musical Comedy Company, presenting The High Flyers. The company includes Ben Dillon, Lillie Sutherland, Lola Fawn, Marie Pennington, Jack Curtis, Will King, Fred Lancaster and chorus. Mr. White has made arrangements to book exclusively through the Great Western Theatrical Circuit.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 22.—The Shuberts have now finished the remodeling of the old Lyric Theatre and have turned it into one of the best houses in the city. Their first production, The Gay Musician, went off with a snap, although the stage was a little small for so large a company; they played to good houses. Their next production will be The Man From Home, which will run the last four nights of this week. Salt Lake (Geo. D. Pyper, mgr.)—Geo. M. Cohan was certainly the "man of the hour" the last part of last week. The large houses which he drew were more than well pleased with him. His production was greatly enjoyed. The last half of this week the new musical comedy, Lo, will be produced, with John E. Young in the role of the young Tammany politician. Colonial (R. A. Grant, mgr.)—The Spoilers was good and played to very good houses. The Girl Question will be presented this week. Grand (A. B. Jensen)—It seems to be the same old story this winter with Willard Mack as it was last when he was unable to play about half of the time. But the Grand management, which represents Pelton & Smutzer, are not so lenient with him as was the Colonial last year. They put the cold proposition before him of playing every week or getting out of the company. It seems he chose the former, as the Grand has a new leading man from the East, Mr. McCullough, who is making good. This week they will give Brown of Harvard. Orpheum (A. H. Garrett, res. mgr.)—The bill last week was a little below the standard. This week there will be Mary Norman, Ed F. Reynard in a Morning in Hicksville; Duffin-Rodcay troupe; Signor Ancillotti and his dog, Pilu; Patrice in the playlet, The Lobbyist; Hopkins Sisters in Luna Land; Chasino, the silhouette master, and some new kinodrome pictures.

Blackwood, Grauman and Welch---Does This Mean Cohan and Har- ris, Too?

The story sent out from New York last Friday that John Blackwood of Los Angeles, D. J. Grauman of this city and Jack Welch of New York had formed a company to build a stock house in San Francisco, is of the most interesting bit of news presented in a long time. As Welch is Cohan & Harris' general manager, does it mean that this big firm is in on the deal. Detailed information as to the plans of the new firm are not available just now, but will probably be ready for next week's REVIEW.

Commencement Days Still Out

Our information regarding Commencement Days as published last week was erroneous. The company is still out and will be in this city after the first of the year. The show is receiving splendid notices everywhere.

Duck Hunters Almost Miss a Performance

Thirty-five ducks and twelve snipe almost caused two postponed performances Wednesday night. C. W. Kolb and Percy Bronson of the Princess Company and Victor Moore of The Talk of New York company went hunting Wednesday morning on the Suisun marshes. They caught a train at the hunting lodge at 7:28 and after traveling a few miles found out that they could not reach the city in time for the rise of the curtain. To add to their anxiety, the dense fog on the bay caused a very slow trip across after reaching Oakland, and it was nine o'clock before the shows started.

Flora Parker Gets Her Divorce

A verdict of divorce for Flora Parker, formerly seen in the Queen of the Moulin Rouge, was announced Tuesday in New York in the Supreme Court as the sequel to the raid she made recently on her husband's apartments at the Hotel Bayard. Carter de Haven did not appear at the inquiry where the jurors heard the evidence. Throughout the proceedings, which were attended by Miss Parker and a dozen girls familiar in Broadway choruses, the name of the stage beauty who is said to have been found by the wife in De Haven's room, was not mentioned. Jerome C. Baum, a private detective, the chief witness, testified that he had "shadowed" Carter de Haven and had seen him go to his apartments with a handsome young woman on October 24th last and on October 26th.

Value of Pertinacity

William A. Brady's experience with George Broadhurst's drama, The Dollar Mark, seems likely to bear out that astute manager's judgment of the value of the play. Two weeks ago the piece was put on for a full week in Troy. The receipts for the first performance were $177, but Mr. Brady said the week's takings did not fall below $6,000. The experience of The Dollar Mark in New York convinced pretty much everybody but Brady himself that the play was of no great value. But it takes more than one swallow to make a summer for Brady. Otherwise there would have been no Way Down East, no present starring tour of Robert Mantell, and several other highly profitable attractions would have been allowed to adorn the junk heap. "I had faith in The Dollar Mark from the first," said Mr. Brady in describing his position, "but if I had been a quitter my faith wouldn't have done me much good. It is hard work finding open time at this part of the season, but along after Thanksgiving there will be something of a loosening up, and in the meanwhile I'll have to do the best I can. I am satisfied, though, that I am on a live one."

Geo. Gill Goes to San- itarium

George Gill, who suffered a breakdown when he arrived here three weeks ago, left last Tuesday for Monrovia, near Los Angeles, where he will be a member of a noted sanitarium for the next six months or a year, until his health is restored. And thousands of friends all over the country will hope for this, for George Gill, showman, circus man, general promoter, is known and beloved from one end of the country to another. Last Saturday Eddie Dunn, who is ahead of George Cohan's company, got in town and, seeing the state of his old friend's health, got together with Alex McDonald of The Land of Nod Company, and in about an hour had received contributions to the amount of $151.00 from members of The Talk of New York Company, of which Mr. Gill is the agent, and from other friends in the city, among which were the managers of the St. James Hotel, who were liberal contributors. Immediately after this arrangements were made for Mr. Gill to go South, and George Cohan, when notified, replied that Mr. Gill was to take a lay-off as long as was necessary on full salary. Mr. Elmore from the New York office was then sent for to go ahead of The Talk of New York. Mrs. Gill has been sent for, and there is an almost certainty that Mr. Gill, under the treatment developed at this famous sanitarium will be restored to good health before many months.

W. R. ABRAMS, Agnes Johns, Frank Weeks, Art Witting and Mattie Davis are new members of the Mack Swain Company in Santa Cruz.

Ed Redmond continues his great success in stock in San Jose. This week the bill is How Baxter Butted In, and Charlie Gunn, Myrtle Vane, Ed Redmond, Howard Foster and Kernan Cripps are making hits.

Van Ness Theatre

So familiar are those who follow current theatrical matters with The Talk of New York, that nothing need be said at this time of its plot. It is hardly fair to dismiss the piece without paying another compliment to Victor Moore, who, as Kid Burns, is the principal figure in the bill. Charlotte Gray, Emma Littlefield, Mae Phelps, George O'Donnell, John Conroy, William A. Williams and Joe Smith Marba, all contribute to the success of the Cohan show. The chorus is drilled to the minute and get through their numbers in a rush, as all good Cohan choruses do. For that matter, the whole performance goes with the rush of a cyclone on a level prairie.

Princess Theatre

There is such a thing as having too firmly established a reputation. C. William Kolb is experiencing this pleasing embarrassment at the Princess, where he is, for the first time in San Francisco, at least, working in a role that demands something different than does the elongated German, with the shoe brush whiskers, with whom we are all familiar. It is a puzzle to many who see him as the sensitive Mr. Hoggenheimer, to know always just when and where to laugh. With Dill it is different. He plays a broad comedy part, and his audiences are sufficiently familiar with his line of work to know just where to give expression to their merriment. The above is not to be taken as meaning that the bill now on at the Princess is a disappointment. It is not. In its light and melodious way, it is a hit, and a big one. Only, it does prove how hard it is sometimes for a mummer to entirely disassociate himself with his characteristic successes. Lillian Berri is thoroughly satisfactory. She is one of the most dependable women in her line on the stage today. Carlton Chase has much to do with the musical success of the bill. Percy Bronson is another member of the company who is entitled to special notice. Olga Stech does good work, and keeps up her amazing popularity. Sydney De Gray belongs to the group of successful favorites. The scenic effects are new and artistic, and the gowns fresh from the costumers. Kolb and Dill will undoubtedly make one of the biggest successes of their present season in The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer.

Garrick Theatre

The Soul Kiss, the much-talked-of and advertised musical play, has been compared to The Girl from Rectors, but the comparison is rather an invidious one. Certainly it played 300 nights in New York with a large floating and transient population to cater to, "mostly Rubes in New York," says Kid Burns. The Soul Kiss has too much Tenderloin double entendre and broad witticism to suit the average San Francisco playgoer, though its music and dancing are a relief to the, at times, ordinary dialogue. The scenery is above par, and some beautiful specimens of the scene painter's art were visible. Madame Pertina, premiere danseuse, is an artiste of great merit and demonstrated a lithe and smiling activity which won the favor of the audience in an emphatic manner. Her charming personality and talents are worthy of a better and more cohesive story. Much of the work of the evening falls on Ben Grinnell, a versatile and clever actor, who plays the part of Lucifer Mephisto in a sardonic and satisfying way. His several character make-ups interested and amused the audience, while his monologue of reminiscence on the old days of the drama, "They were actors then," was one of the hits of the evening. The chorus contains some remarkably pretty girls and is notable for its precision.

Valencia Theatre

A roster of those present at the Valencia Theatre during the past week would have read like a society blue book. Fashionable theatre parties have been numerous, and, from the boxes, many of San Francisco's most exclusive set have watched with amused interest the efforts of the rich Mr. Hopkinson to scale the slippery heights of London society—Society that spells itself with a capital S, and is pervaded by dukes, duchesses, earls and lords. The play, by R. C. Carton, is well named Mr. Hopkinson, for "Hoppy" is "it." Dallas Welford, the one and only Mr. Hopkinson, is supported by the original company of English actors and actresses, and the difference between the star and his company is that they act, and he doesn't. Most well-drawn stage characters are almost human, but "Hoppy" is human to such a degree that there are moments when it seems, to use a phrase of his, "positively indelicate" to gaze into a fellow creature's naked soul—and such a little, cheap, commonplace soul at that. One of these days some great Ibsen expert may discover that Mr. Hopkinson is not a comedy at all, but a biting satire on society, and that Mr. Welford, far from being a mere comedian, is in truth a Duse in trousers. Pending this enlightenment, however, the mass of theatregoers do not trouble about any profound psychological meaning that may be lurking in Mr. Hopkinson; they just laugh at the artless antics of the little man who, by the unexpected death of an uncle in the Colonies, is suddenly transformed from a country tradesman into the thrifty possessor of eighty thousand pounds a year. The play has none of the complications of the ordinary farce-comedy. With Dallas Welford as "Hoppy" it doesn't need them. In act II, however, there is a new and positively delightful situation. The Earl of Addleton has come from Spain to his daughter's wedding to a rich and irreproachable young man. The irascible Earl has barely recovered from his seasickness when he is introduced to his prospective son-in-law, and snorts with dismay on beholding the impossible little bounder, "Hoppy." Determined to make conversation with the august nobleman, "Hoppy" artlessly describes a steamboat trip he once took "on a bank 'oliday" round the Nore, and vividly portrays the undulations of the waves—a bit of realism which, for the Earl, revives all the horrors of his recent sea trip. The ensuing conversation, consisting of groans on the Earl's part, is funny enough to extract laughter from the tragic muse herself. Frederick Powell is excellent as the Earl. Warren Fabien is good as the Duke, and the other male parts are well sustained. Jane Wheatley Rorke is a beautiful Duchess of Braceborough, and among the other women of the cast, Kate Milloy stands out by her spirited acting as the maid.

Alcazar Theatre

The Alcazar is presenting one of its most sumptuous productions this week in The Warrens of Virginia, which had a year's run in New York. The magnificence of the first act setting put everybody in good humor for the four acts that were unfolded during the evening, even if the story was a trifle slow in unfolding. The plot revolves about a trick of false dispatches, by means of which General Warren is deluded into directing a supply train, the final hope of the Confederates, into taking the road to an ambush. There is a Federal lieutenant who loves Agatha, Warren's daughter, and his call at her home as an invited guest is the means of placing the misleading documents in her father's hands. The device leads into situations of dramatic suspense and poignant effect, with the love affair and the fate of Lee's army in the balance during the second and third acts, and the final episode taking place five years after peace has been proclaimed. The chief honors go to Evelyn Vaughan, who is seen as Agatha Warren, and Howard Hickman, who plays the part of "Buck" Warren, the Confederate general. Miss Vaughan's charm of personality and her ability to bring out the emotional strength of a part were strongly in evidence, and throughout the play her work was of the most artistic and enjoyable nature. Mr. Hickman played the old Confederate with fine understanding and strong conviction throughout. Will Walling, as the Federal commanding officer presented one of his best recent performances, and Christie McLean was immensely fine as the old negro mammy. John Ince played the hero as well as possible, but such a bad hero, from a player's standpoint has seldom been written, and Mr. Ince did exceedingly well with the part, inasmuch that he kept himself on solid ground, after skirting all around dangerous spots. William Garwood is deserving of special notice for a fine characterization of the young Southern son and soldier.

Personals

JOHN CORT is arranging to put out a second and Western company in The Kissing Girl, the attraction now at the Cort Theatre in Chicago. May De Sousa, featured recently in The Waltz Dream, is to be the prima donna of the new organization, which will play sixteen weeks in the Middle West. The organization will number 42 people. It will open on Christmas day.

LOUIS MORRISON has retired from the King Stock of San Diego and is in town.

PEARL ALLEN writes from Medicine Hat, Canada, that his stock company is doing very well in Canada, where they have become great favorites.

EVERETT SACKETT, who is well known as an experienced manager and agent, has accepted the position of business manager of the Valencia Theatre.

DOLLY PARNELL, a popular musical comedy actress of London, was married Tuesday to Prince Nesir Ali Khan, the son of one of the most powerful of the native rulers of India. The prince presented his bride with jewels valued at $100,000.

MAXINE ELLIOTT, who is her own "manageress," has come to the conclusion that there is a lamentable dearth

Judith Warren

A strong, striking personality and one particularly suited to characters and second business is that possessed by Judith Warren. Miss Warren has found her best work to be in characters that demand deep study and psychological insight, and her characterizations are invariably clothed in an intense power that is rarely a possession of a young actress. She has not yet signed for this season.

of good plays. Furthermore, Miss Elliott submits this puzzling query: "Who can tell a good play when he reads one?" After which she timidly remarks: "Certainly not the critic, for they know as little about it as anybody else—they merely tell the public what they themselves like, which very often is what the public doesn't like." But, hold! Miss Elliott is kind enough to admit that managers and a great many actors who can select their own plays pick out the very ones which fit some particular personality. This revelation, however, cannot be regarded as very extraordinary in the light of Miss Elliott's requirements, for it is patent that she requires a play with a star part for a woman of charm, beauty, lovely clothes and all that sort of thing. After divulging these few secrets of her managerial duties, Miss Elliott does not object to letting playwrights know that her permanent address is Maxine Elliott's Theatre, New York.

PAUL GILMORE, who is starring this season in The Call of the North, appeared in Staunton, Va., last Friday week in the dual role of actor and bridegroom. As a culmination of a romantic courtship extending over many months, Gilmore was married to Miss Ethel Elizabeth Cauly of California, a strikingly handsome girl and a former member of the Gilmore company. The young woman and her mother, Mrs. M. Jones, went down from New York Thursday and awaited the arrival of the actor, who was to play at the Staunton theatre. The company arrived in the morning, and the wedding took place in the early evening. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. D. R. Sancher. The bride's mother and a few local friends of the groom were the only witnesses. The marriage was kept secret from the other members of the company until Gilmore boarded the train for his next engagement with his wife by his side. This is Gilmore's third venture upon the sea of matrimony. He was divorced from his second wife during the past summer.

The Orpheum

In writing of the performances at the Orpheum, it is the conventional thing to pen, "The program at this popular house is exceptionally good this week," or something of that sort. So just to be thoroughly original, and slightly heterodox in such matters, no reference whatever will be made to the quality of the bill in the opening lines of this write-up. Howard's Musical Shetlands do an original animal act, which has the charm of distinct novelty to it. There is a little white dog, a member of the company, that dances in perfect time to the music furnished by the equine musicians. Milt Wood, the dancer with the chair, does some very unusual things with his feet. He dances in almost every conceivable position, standing up, sitting down, and on the rungs of the chair. His work is very clever. Two Italians, Vittoria and Giorgietta, present a novel act. Their hand-balancing is unique. An act that deserves good time, and which is apparently getting it, is An Evening with Dickens, in which our old friend of Tivoli days, Edwin Stevens, assisted by capable Tina Marshall, score decided hits. Stevens is exceedingly clever in his portrayal of different characters from the works of the great English novelist. The De Haven Sextette, in a well-dressed act, called The Understudy, are welcome ones on O'Farrell Street. They sing catchy songs, dance gracefully, and go through the intricacies of their turn with machine-like precision. For all that, their work is not mechanical. Just why the title, The Understudy is used, the program does not make plain. The act itself by any other name would be as good. Fraulein Katchen Loisset has a trained animal act. She has, in addition to a pleasing voice, a flock of educated pigeons and a dog which impersonates different human characters, in costume. Ben Welch, the character comedian, presents himself in his humorous monologue. His characterizations of Hebrew and Italian types are still the standard in their way. Long ago Mr. Welch became the best performer in his line. John B. Hymer, in The Devil and Tom Walker, assisted by a company of ten, including Elsie Kent, gives an elaborately dressed act. The abilities of the people in the company is far superior to the book and the music. The motion pictures are good, and the orchestra thoroughly pleasing.

Pantages-Central

Wonder if the public realize what a show they can see for 10-20-30 at Pantages Central this week. Every act on the bill is a headline act and a star act. For instance, we have Jacques Greno, the Parisian balancing wizard, and a wizard he must be to do his stunts on the wire. He is so much at home in the air that he sits on a camp-stool and prepares and cooks a meal and eats it. Did you ever see anyone else on any stage do that? He has a novelty and that's what the public want. Greno's act is neat and interesting, and he does some wonderful balancing. Then we have Ned Nye, not only a monologist, but comic opera star, writer, composer. Mr. Nye has written some of the best books ever published. His latest, Nazette, created as big a sensation as Trilby. In fact, Mr. Nye has been compared with De Maurier. Everyone always enjoys his work. Mr. Seymour's dogs possess a value far beyond the regulation animal act. They do not show a great variety, but their feats are wonderful, all due to careful training and patience. He has trained three dogs to play tunes without a mistake, which shows his wonderful ability. An act which Frisco theatre-goers cannot forget, and which has the only character of its kind is Jesse Mack & Co., in a very funny comedy, entitled My Mother-in-Law. Mr. Mack is the originator and only one doing this character. In fact, no one can imitate him. He was formerly of the great vaudeville team of Monroe, Mack and Lawrence, who played the Orpheum six or seven seasons. Mr. Mack has a clever company and does not have to resort to any slapstick comedy methods. His makeup in itself is a scream, and the comedy is legitimate. Mabel Belmont is sweet as the daughter, and has a very charming personality. The man whose name is not on the program is also fine-looking, with a rich speaking voice. A familiar head-line act of note is the "Clarks," the greatest banjo act in the business. Mr. Clarke is one of our best composers; in fact, he is writing the music for Greno's new act, which will be one of the greatest sensational novelties ever produced in this country. Greno's act will cost him two thousand dollars before the curtain rises on it, and Mr. Clarke has promised great things for him in the music line. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are about the only people who make real music on a banjo, because they are both thorough musicians, and, furthermore, Mr. Clarke makes his own banjos. Two of his banjos cost him $500 apiece to make. They are works of art. Next we have the Great Buckner, the trick bicycle rider, who performs some wonderful feats on his cycle. For instance, riding down stairs backwards; a jump of 15 feet, made in two jumps, which makes one hold his breath. Abdallah, the Arabian whirlwind tumbler, is a marvel. Kembling has good songs and "some" voice.

American Theatre

Manager Pilling stands back in the shadow and smiles a broad smile that freely translated might mean: "See them coming. The American has caught the vaudeville crowds." Frank Parker, the modern Hercules, exhibits some wonderful feats of strength by balancing beds, dressers, tables etc., on his chin. The act is a novelty. Edna Davenport always presents something new and good. She seems to have caught the idea of just what the public wants. As a singer and dancer, she is in the front rank. Hugh Emmett and wife, in a ventriloquist and violin act, have a new and novel turn. It is utterly impossible to detect any movement of the throat during Mr. Emmett's ventriloquial performance. Hugh Emmett has a violin, generally known as the speaking violin, so great the skill of the player—and with this skill is a very unusual artistic development. For Hugh Emmett is just as good a player of high class music as he is of popular airs and medleys. He is assisted by Mrs. Emmett, a strikingly handsome woman, who is a pianist of great merit. Willison and Stonaker are two boys who have unusual voices. Mr. Stonaker has a voice like Patti, wonderful and startling. The pair have a novel act and worth while going to see. Geo. Evers, in his black-face act, is always funny and never tiresome. One of the prettiest acts seen in a long time is the McFallen and Carson skating turn. They are the world's greatest fancy skaters and they dress their act beautifully.

The National

Another fine bill is presented this week. Bell and Caron have an excellent act of the Rice and Prevost style. John Bell does some wonderful somersaults and tumbling. The toe dancing of Miss Caron is beyond criticism. She is exceedingly clever, in fact, both are. The Rosedale Four have excellent voices and some new numbers. The act is a little long, but one almost forgets the length while listening to the sweet voice of Miss Miller's soprano, with a face just as sweet. Morris and Morton are billed as the boys with the flying feet, and surely they are rightly named. Morris, in black-face, doesn't overdo, and Morton is a good straight man, and both can dance. The act is dressed very well. Harry and Kate Jackson, old favorites, known from coast to coast, have a screamingly funny act. Both are comedians of the first degree, and their setting and effects were great. The ship-wreck scene is especially effective. Those performers who call themselves monologists should see Harry Thompson if they want to know the real definition of the word. Harry is in a class by himself, and you'll all agree that you never heard any of his stuff before. Ezra Kendall, James Morton, Geo. Fuller Gold, James Thornton—never saw the day they could beat Harry Thompson. Added to a fine talent, he has a wonderful personality. Mlle. Martha, with her beautiful figure, displays it very gracefully while performing some very good gymnastic stunts. Not forgetting the orchestra and moving pictures, which are always good, the show is an excellent one.

The Wigwam

The Edwin T. Emery Company is the feature of the Wigwam this week in one of their comedy acts. Other clever turns are offered by The Labakans, Killion and Moore, Howard Missmer & Co., Edwin T. Emery & Co., Ernest Pantzer & Co., Dick and Alice McAvoy.

H. H. Frazee, the Chicago theatrical manager, is to send Jim Jeffries, Frank Gotch and other celebrities on a vaudeville tour of the country, opening December 1st.

Ringling Bros. Beginning to Feel Effects of Competition

The Ringling Brothers have filed a suit in equity against the Sells-Floto circus as a company, and F. G. Bonfils and H. H. Tammen personally, asking $2,000,000 damages and a restraining order preventing the said Sells-Floto Shows Company from using the photographs of William Sells and his family as well as the name "Sells." In their complaint they allege that they have bought up the Barnum & Bailey shows, the Ringling shows, Adam Forepaugh show and the Sells Brothers' show. "Probably the real reason this suit is brought," says the Denver Post, is because of the growth of the Sells-Floto Circus, the Sells-Floto being recognized by the circus trust as a dangerous competitor. Up to this time a guerilla warfare has been practiced by this outfit by covering up the bills of the Sells-Floto circus. For instance, it is customary when showing in any city, and especially small towns, to post bills twenty and thirty miles out in the country and make arrangements with the owners of barns or fences to post Sells-Floto bills, paying therefor either in money or circus tickets. In the course of a little while one of the trust agents would come along and say to the farmer: 'The Sells-Floto Circus is busted up, but Ringling Brothers, or one of the Ringling shows is coming,' and so the Sells-Floto tickets are taken up and others given in their place and a bill is posted, reading: 'Ringling Brothers, Coming Soon.' Their hired men go about the country telling all sorts of stories, and they are aided and abetted by Thomas M. Patterson, the idea being that the people in other States, not knowing the Sells-Floto Circus, and the trust having three or four aggregations, it is easy to tear up or destroy the Sells-Floto property." In commenting on the big suit and the circus fight, the Denver Republican has the following: "It is Goliath against David, the big combine against the Denver outfit away from home; but since papers were served at the temple of justice on Champa Street 7228—Galley 15. Dramatic recently the result may be as in the Biblical story with David doing the crowing. ## Brown of Harvard Has a Successful Week at Ye Liberty in Oakland

OAKLAND, Nov. 24.—Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the attendance at the various playhouses is fully up to the standard. At the Liberty, Manager Bishop reports a very good week. Brown of Harvard is the current attraction. College plays always appeal to Oakland theatre-goers, and this week's production is no exception. The play abounds with college activities, and student life is well depicted in the various incidents. Coming, as it does, so shortly after the big intercollegiate football contest, it arouses considerable enthusiasm amongst the audience. Especially is this noticeable in the boathouse scene of the third act. The leading role of Tom Brown was interpreted by Sidney Ayres. He looked the typical student at all times. The part of the weak, easily influenced and vacillating character, Wilfred Kenyon, was to have been played by Robert Harrison, but at the last moment he was compelled to keep out of this week's engagement on account of illness, and Andrew Bennison was called upon to take his place. Although there was but very little time for preparation, Mr. Bennison undertook the part and made a remarkable showing. He was up in his lines and gave a masterful interpretation of the role. Walter Whipple was Thorne, stroke of the crew, and with his two hundred pounds of weight, he looked every inch the college athlete. George Friend, Clarence Elmer, Robert Lawlor and Henry Shumer gave an exact delineation of students with a properly developed college spirit. Maude Odell as Evelyn Kenyon was fair, while Edith Lyle made a pretty and winsome Marie Thorne. The Mrs. Kenyon of Mrs. Mina Gleason was one of the best sustained characters of the play and was a very creditable performance. The scenery was very appropriate, and the properties complete in every detail. Great praise is due George Webster for the thoroughness with which the play was presented. Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall will follow. The motion pictures of the Johnson-Ketchell fight were on display at the Macdonough, 18-19, and drew small houses. The Three Twins will play a re-engagement, 25-27; The Land of Nod, 28; The Soul Kiss, 29-Dec. 1. The educated baboon, Charles the First, is still the chief attraction at the Orpheum and is daily mystifying the audiences with his various feats and intellect. Our Boys in Blue is also a big feature that gains considerable applause. The other numbers also contain considerable merit, and there is not a weak number on the program. McConnell and Simpson, Tempest and Sunshine Trio, Bobby Pandor and Brother, Minnie Seligman and Wm. Bramwell, Bounding Gordons and the Bootblack Quartette. At the Bell, a San Francisco boy, Eddie Gallagher, is the big smoke. His sketch, entitled The Battle of Bay Rum, is a clever piece of work and takes exceptionally well with the audience. The balance of the program consists of Kitabanzai Troupe, Markham Divorce Case, Steeley and Edwards and Dorothy Dahl. Dr. Wullner, accompanied by Coenrad V. Bos, gave a concert at The Liberty, 24. Their work was very artistic and caused the greatest amount of enthusiasm. The house was fairly well filled with music lovers, and from all expressions they considered the afternoon performance a treat. LOUIS SCHEELINE.

The Bachelor

Charles Cherry in Clyde Fitch's latest comedy, The Bachelor, with the original Maxine Elliott Theatre cast and production, will be presented here for the first time for one week only by the Shuberts, starting next Sunday at the Valencia Theatre, with the usual matinee Saturday. The story of the play is that of a confirmed bachelor, who is very much opposed to matrimony, and while advancing arguments against this blissful state he is unconsciously falling in love with his pretty stenographer. It so happens, but unknown to him, that the typist comes of a distinguished family, the mother, daughter and brother living in New York under an assumed name as the result of reduced circumstances. The "kid" brother, having learned that the bachelor has taken his sister to the theatre once or twice, believes he is endeavoring to compromise her, and under the impression that he is doing the family a service he rails at his sister's employer, with the result that the bachelor offers himself a victim on the altar of matrimony. Very much satisfied with his work, the brother informs his sister of what he has done. The girl breaks off the engagement. The author, however, manages to bring the lovers together before the final curtain. Mr. Cherry, of course, is the star, but the support is made up of some notable players. Ruth Maycliffe will be remembered as the pretty ingenue of Girls, who wagged her toes at the audience when retiring for the night in a Morris chair. Lillian Paige made herself famous in several London productions. Alice Riker plays Hilda, the Swedish servant. F. Percival Stevens was five years in Beerbohm Tree's London company. Others are Ralph Morgan and Charles Laite. The production and cast come direct and intact to the Coast.

JOHN HARLEY is on his way to the Coast ahead of The Man from Home. LIP KEENE is due here soon, ahead of Forty-five Minutes from Broadway. The Ringmaster Company, which played at Valencia a few weeks ago, closes Saturday, November 27th, at Sioux City.

Victor Moore Has That Letter-Writing Habit

Last week the editor of the Sacramento Bee had occasion to criticize Victor Moore, who is the star of The Talk of New York. Mr. Moore took the criticism most impatiently and was very frank in his reply to the editor, who published it the next day without comment. As clipped from the Bee, the letter was as follows:

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 15, 1909. C. K., Sacramento Bee.

Sacramento, Cal.

Sir:—? Your review of our performance, The Talk of New York, was so absolutely original that I can not resist the temptation to write you, trusting that you will be kind enough to send me your Photo or at least acknowledge my letter. Having played the part of Kid Burns for four years and a half, in such small villages as New York, Chicago, Phila., Boston and Walla Walla, and being lauded as a "real actor" by the best critics of the aforesaid towns, it seems strange that I should find out in a town like Sacre-mento from a struggling scribe whose weekly stipend is perhaps at the outside 20 per week that I belong to the "Gold Brick" class. It seems doubly strange that the audience WHO PAID TO GET IN should have enjoyed such a rotten show enough to have demanded a curtain speech from the "Gold Brick." True, I do not dance. I cannot dance. Have never accepted a part that required dancing. Oh! I see. You are perhaps the man who reviews the performances at the dives and concert halls, where they sing and dance; and the regular man being ill, you were sent to criticize a real Metropolitan Performance, entirely out of your class. Perhaps you noticed that I did not try to sing, but talked my songs. And if you can suggest a good place for a dance to be introduced by Kid Burns I will go to a dancing master and be taught—what sort of a dance would you prefer? If you would do Scott Welch a favor send him one of your notices, as he has had many of the other kind. Now please acknowledge this letter and if you are sincere in what you wrote I should love to have your photograph for which I enclose stamps. You are the first and only one in thousands, and in my estimation a most remarkable man (or boy). I shall treasure your notice which I had considerable trouble of finding. And when some well meaning friend slaps me on the back and tells me how good I am, I shall pull from my pocket a worn piece of paper and show him his error. I shall be at the Van Ness here for two weeks and I am sincere in asking you to write to me, stating if you will your real reason for your very original write up. Very truly yours,

VICTOR MOORE,

Dan Kelly Takes His Pen in Hand

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 11.—Editor REVIEW: If I had never left my plumbing tools behind me, I might have made a noise in the world! What this leads to follows. It seems to be the cult—or shall I stick to Frisco language and say, fashion?—with certain magazines and other publications to print "interviews" with player folk (who can afford the price). The blushing artist is asked in a trembling voice his or her origin, their early struggles, the "hard" (got it?) work before success came, what art means to them—and much enough of that sort to cause a well-advertised breakfast food untold agony. Now, I just threw through the window an over-paid monthly publication of the sort I have mentioned, which contained a press agent story of how "Favy"—on the big bills, Faversham (he of The Squaw Man)—was once a plumber. True, there is nothing in the badly written article that reflects on the noble art of "hitting the pipe," although I beg to differ with the inspired author when he states that "Favy," after four days' tuition, could "wipe a joint" as well as a union man. (Sheriff Dolan will, I am sure, endorse this.) But why rush the retiring plumber into unsolicited notice? I grant you that Faversham never felt himself above honest labor. No decent man does. Speaking of plumbers: Dave Warfield in another of those interviews tells of his early experience, wherein one of the actors was a plumber and carried his tools in his trunk. Now I was that actor, and I regret that I have lost my tools! I returned from England some time since, and being short of "copy," the N. Y. Mirror rushed me into sudden fame by announcing that "Kelly goes back to his trade, plumbing." Louis Harrison stopped me on Broadway and asked if the information thrown into the unsympathetic lap of the reading public was authentic. I told him it was. He pleaded with me to reconsider—spoke of the world of art losing a shining light (he was not personal), and more to the same effect; but I was adamant (good word). I rushed to my California home, looked in the old familiar place, and NO TOOLS. Six years have passed and I am still trying to act. I must mention that a plumber's kit costs a little more than twelve dollars in American money, and how an actor on the Coast can ever save twelve dollars? Tears, idle tears! Oh, how I long for those lost tools! As I watch the local plumbers rushing by in their touring cars, how envy encompasses me? Please, do you know the whereabouts of my tools? DAN KELLY.

Friar Shanley Now Host of the Continental

The Continental Hotel was leased Tuesday for a term of ten years to the Shanley-Furness Company. F. P. Shanley, one of the lessees, was for two years manager of the St. James Hotel in Van Ness Avenue, and J. C. Furness was chief clerk. Messrs. Shanley & Furness made that hotel very popular with the members of the theatrical profession, and they propose to continue to cater to the theatrical profession. They have a fine, new fireproof hotel near the railroad offices, and confidently expect to win a large measure of success.

The Spoilers

The Spoilers, which will come to the Coast in the near future is ingeniously constructed, and lovers of plain dramatic fiction cannot fail to detect in it qualities which they are sure to admire. Rex Beach has put enough human interest and dramatic material in The Spoilers for half a dozen plays. Each of the leading characters of this great play combine enough definite traits to equip a whole community of people. Yet its intricate ramifying interests are pieced and dovetailed together with extraordinary technical skill. They are all plausible and work out logically in the end. The scenes are laid in the goldfields of Alaska, with Nome as the center of interest, and the story of the play hinges around the attempted swindle of the miners of Nome and vicinity by a syndicate of wealthy Eastern capitalists. Nearly everybody in the great West has read the book, and it is needless to say that at least half of them remember the story of the struggles and hardships of Glenister and his companions to retain possession of their property, and their final victory over the swindlers. Mr. McRae has staged this play in a sumptuous manner, and the company, numbering twenty, is composed of some of America's best actors. Margaret Oswald, a charming and popular leading woman, heads the company, supported by such well-known people as Allen Holluber, Frank McQuarrie and also Eli Smith and his famous Alaskan dogs, which are a splendid street advertisement for the company.

Many Give to Reed Relief Fund

The Philadelphia relief benefit for Laura and Florence, the "Sisters" of the late Roland Reed, has received bountiful responses from the profession and theatrical managers. Messrs. Zimmerman & Nixon donate the Chestnut Street Opera House, lighted, heated, and with all attaches, and in addition have purchased two gallery tickets for $100 each. Francis Wilson has sent his check for $100; Robert L. Dailey, of the Jolly Bachelors Company, is taking up a collection, and from the spirit of his letter the contribution will be a benefit in itself. Many of the profession have donated liberally. Many prominent business firms have contributed handsomely. Among the list is Mr. Harry C. Dunlap, who donated all printing and $100 for one ticket. Walter E. Hering, all tickets and $25. Mr. Charles W. Beck, Sr., donated engraving plates and $50. Felix Isman, offices complete and $25; Grant & Co., furniture;

G. C. Hutchins, manager of the Oliver Typewriter Company, typewriter; Mr. George Young, safe, and many others have forwarded their checks to Manager George C. Brotherton, whose offices are in the Mint Arcade, toward this worthy object. The benefit performance will take place at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Tuesday afternoon, December 7th. An army of talent have volunteered, all the companies playing in Philadelphia amusement houses being represented.

New Trial for Mrs. Teal

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 23.—The

Court of Appeals today reversed the judgment of conviction and ordered a new trial in the case of Mrs. Margaret Teal, who was sentenced to a year's imprisonment for subornation of perjury growing out of the Frank Gould divorce case. Mrs. Teal rented apartments to Bessie Devoe, an actress named as co-respondent in the case. The specific charge was that Mrs. Teal tried to induce Mabel McCausland, an employe of a millinery store, to testify that she had called on Miss Devoe and saw Gould there.

Los Angeles Actors Want Suburban Club

Plans for an actors' club house, to be a headquarters for members of the profession were furthered at a meeting of those interested, in Dick Ferris' office in Los Angeles, on November 17th. A committee to find a location was appointed, consisting of Mr. Ferris, Lewis S. Stone, Mrs. J. P. Stockdale, William Yerance and Charles Giblyn. This body will proceed to investigate available buildings in the suburbs of Los Angeles, and will be appreciative of suggestion from players in Los Angeles or vicinity. A location near a car line is preferred. The club will probably purchase some building already erected, although the question of erecting a new club house on the site may be discussed later. The organization was formed a week ago, and its officers are: Lewis S. Stone, president; Henry Stockbridge, secretary; Dick Ferris, treasurer. It is confidently hoped that the new organization will strengthen the cordial feelings already existing among theatrical people of Los Angeles, and the project has the good wishes of all persons in anyway connected with the profession in that city.

Musicology

Musicology means the science of music. All other music books endeavor to teach music as an art, or to discuss it from some special standpoint, as of history, development, use of special instruments, etc. No text-book that treats of music as an art covers the entire scope of music as a science in the way that it is covered in this book of Mr. Logan's, which is aptly titled Musicology. The words of the preface are appropriate here: "The object of this work is to furnish a practical and comprehensive text-book on the theory and philosophy of music, for schools and general use. It deals with the science rather than the art, while most music text-books deal with the art rather than the science. For school use it is intended to be included in the science course, rather than in the music course. From the educational standpoint, either of mental training or useful knowledge, the science of music, as distinct from the art, is entitled to rank with the other sciences taught." Hinds, Noble & Eldredge, 31-33-35 West Fifteenth Street, New York City, are the publishers.

Charles Dillingham's big production of The Prima Donna, the latest Henry

Blossom-Victor Herbert comic opera, with the incomparable Fritz Scheff as the bright particular star of the entertainment, will be the attraction at the Van Ness Theatre, following George M. Cohan.

Marie Cahill, in her newest comedy hit, The Boys and Betty, is to come here in January.

Correspondence

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Lew Fields presented Lew Fields at Lew Fields' Herald Square Theatre in Old Dutch last week. There was much more of Lew Fields on the programme and billboards than in the actual production. It's Edgar Smith's fault. He wrote the book of the musical farce, and neglected to provide the star with enough work. Victor Herbert contributed a pleasant musical score; Fields furnished as pretty a collection of chorus and show girls as anyone could ask for; Ned Wayburn arranged some pretty movements for them and somebody supplied many brilliant and beautiful costumes. Fields plays the part of an absent-minded inventor who has recently done a big thing and runs away to the Tyrol to escape praise and notoriety, taking his daughter with him. He registers as Leopold Mueller to conceal his identity, hits upon the name of a well known swindler, loses his pocketbook, which is found by the real Mueller, and is accepted as the real swindler, while the latter receives honors as the inventor. Unable to pay his hotel bill, the proprietor puts the real inventor at work in the stable, and a short scene in which he attempts to be valet to the horse contains a trace of the old Fields fun. Alice Dovey is the little sou-brette to whom most of the musical numbers are assigned, and Charles Judels was an excitable French hotel manager. Eva Davenport, the ample one as of old, and Ada Lewis, are also in the cast. William Raymond sang and other men were John E. Henshaw, John Bunny and Vernon Castle. * * * With as accomplished an artist as George Arliss in the cast, and with a story containing as much humor as Septimus, it was a fore-gone conclusion that the audience at the Hackett last Monday night would find a good deal to please them in the play which Phillip Littell has made from W. J. Locke's book. And, indeed, though the adapter has by no means developed a play to be regarded very seriously, he has managed to retain enough of the story to carry many of the simple sayings and the simple doings of the hero. And this, in nine cases out of ten, is about all anyone can do in dramatizing a long novel. Septimus continued to be quite as simple in covers as in the pages of a magazine, and this, too, in spite of the loss of his qualifying adjective. He was, moreover, a most retiring person. And as simplicity and the quality of being retiring are just the two things which are furthest removed from what is ordinarily regarded as dramatic and theatric there was the double difficulty in this case.

However Septimus himself comes over the footlight rather more satisfactorily than is often the case in these transplanted novel heroes. Mr. Arliss, personally and temperamentally, is rather too much alive to convey in his own person a complete suggestion of this simple-minded Septimus, but the sympathetic quality of this actor's mind and art and the variety and certainty of his method enable him to create a figure which—if not actually

Septimus—is a most agreeable and winning substitute. And, after all, imagination does play one tricks, and it is by no means certain that any two persons will agree as to what Septimus actually was like, except in the vague general way that he was simple, and tender, and somewhat slow-witted, and yet, at bottom, a thinker and a man of brains. * * * Frank Lord, the author of the new play produced at the Bijou Theatre last week, is a young playwright and a lawyer as well. In his playwright capacity he has been guilty of lese majeste against his profession, for his villain is a lawyer, and his theme is the crookedness of crooked lawyers. He has supplied enough of a love story and enough of decent people to make an interesting story outside of the exposure of overshrewd legal lights and money-making insurance companies. He throws a little side-light on the district attorney's office and compares it disadvantageously with the United States Circuit Court. The drama held the attention of the audience and there was no mistaking the genuineness of the applause that followed some of the scenes. The characters, drawn with considerable brutal force, were all well played. Particularly good were Wilson Melrose as Brent, Ethel Clayton as Jarvis, Byron Douglas as Martin, and Walter D. Greene as Hunt. Louise Closser Hale as an elderly stenographer in Hunt's office gave an amusing and natural portrayal. * * * Klaw & Erlanger produced, in Buffalo, last Monday night, for the first time, at the Star Theatre, The Air King, a musical satire on aeronautics. The book is by H. B. Smith and the music by Raymond Hubbell. The big cast is headed by John Slavin, who plays the role of a bell boy, who through mischievous meddling and force of circumstances makes a flight across the Atlantic Ocean in a stolen airship. The first two acts are laid at Seabright, and the last in France. Josie Hall returns to the stage after an absence of six years to play the eccentric role of a manicure girl, posing as an heiress. Thomas Meighan makes his first venture into musical comedy in the part of an airship inventor. Frank Belcher, Scamp Montgomery and Ann Tasker are also in the cast. The Air King goes to the Colonial Theatre, Chicago, for a run opening tomorrow. * * * A new play by the academician, Henry Lavedan, entitled Sire, and based on his well-known novel, was produced last week in Paris at the Theatre Francais. The key to the action is the palming off of the comedian upon an old Vendean Royalist, Mlle. De St. Salbi, as a son of Louis XVI. To expiate the fraud after it is discovered the pseudo Dauphin, in the revolution of 1848, defends the Tuileries in behalf of Louis Philippe and dies on the royal seat in the throne room. According to the advices here by wire the first and second acts are charming. There is a delightful caricature of secret political societies in the other acts. The presentation is admirable, M. Huguenot and Mlle. Pierson holding the chief roles. * * * Geraldine Farrar emerged refulgent last Monday night at the Metropolitan Opera House as Tosca in Puccini's opera of that name. Miss Farrar, filled with the joyous confidence of youth, will be nothing if not versatile. He has cheerfully invaded the realm of the soprano leggiera and been "semper libera" in La Traviata, and she has stormed the heaven-reaching heights of Tannhauser, and shown the world that the saintly Elizabeth was young and very human. There was no other novelty in the performance save the conducting of Egisto Tango, which was full of stress and a more than generous outpour of tone. Mr. Scotti was the same sardonic Scarpia as heretofore and Mr. Martin was a mellow voiced, though not heroic Cavaradossi. * * * Mme. Tétrazini added a new role last Monday night to those in which she was already familiar to patrons of the Manhattan Opera House. She donned the vivandiere's uniform, took up her drum and acted and sang Marie in The Daughter of the Regiment, which Mr. Hammerstein had revived chiefly for her benefit. She entered blithely into the spirit of Donizetti's youthful heroine, and she pouted as prettily and pranced as gayly as could have been asked. On Tuesday night Audran's tuneful operetta, La Mascotte, was produced at the Manhattan Opera House before an audience that nearly filled the auditorium. It was the first time in several years that La Mascotte had been put on the grand opera stage in New York, and Mr. Hammerstein offered it as a feature in his series of comic operas. The familiar strains were as heartily received last night as if they were new. Mlle. Delormes appeared as Bettina. M. Dufour was the Pippo and was a capable suitor of Bettina. The comedy roles were played by M. Blondel as Lorenzo VII. and M. Moyroud as Rocco, the farmer. These gentlemen kept the audience in a very good humor all evening. M. Dambrine sang the leading tenor role, that of Prince Frederic. The three acts were carefully set. The audience especially liked the last scene outside of the inn in the Duchy of Pisa. The light effects here were finely managed. A large chorus under the direction of Alfred Haakman, who was imported by Herr Oscar to conduct the opera comique series, went through several swinging marches and light dances and added a great deal to the general effect of the piece. Louis P. Verande staged La Mascotte. * * * F. C. Whitney will produce Paul Bourget's play, Divorce, at the Lyric Theatre tomorrow afternoon. For the present the play, the English version of which is by Stanislaus Stange, will be seen only at matinees on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of each week. The players include Mary Shaw, Maude Fealy, Isabelle Waldron, Roberta Drosti, Holly Haines, a child actress; John Glendinning, Eben Plympton and John Westley. Bourget's novel, Un Divorce, was dramatized by Bourget and Andre Cury for the French stage. It was produced last season at the Vaudeville Theatre, Paris. * * * Annie Russell is again to be starred by Charles Frohman next season in a comedy now being written. Mr. Frohman says he expects to present her in New York and London. * * * The Messrs. Shuberts have engaged Cyril Scott to star in The Lottery Man, the new comedy by Rida Johnson Young. His leading woman will be Janet Beecher. * * * The Shuberts announce that they soon will make an American production of the Drury Lane spectacular drama, Dick Whittington. * * * There is to be a change of circus programme at the Hippodrome beginning tomorrow. The arenic feature of A Trip to Japan will have ten new acts, including Ray Thompson in an equestrian specialty, Thalero's novelty circus, Ella Bradna and Frederick Derrick in an equestrian act, the Lorch family, acrobats; the five Peres, ladder equilibrists; the three Ploetz Larollas, acrobats, and the Manello Marnitz troupe of balancers. * * * When Col. Henry W. Savage sent his production of the Alexandre Bisson drama, Madame X, to Chicago, it was his intention to have it remain only four weeks, and then to be transferred to New York. But the Chicago public has demanded the retention of the play so insistently that it was impossible to withdraw it. The tenth week of the run is now in progress and shows receipts even greater than any preceding, the total at each performance being absolute capacity. At the present writing it appears that New York will have to wait until January for this sensational work.

Los Angeles is Awaiting the Annual Ball of the Theatrical Treasurers' Association

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 2.—Mr. Morosco's company is this week playing The Heir to the Hoorah, while Mr. Blackwood announces that the sequel to this play, Hoorah for the Heir! will soon be produced at the local Belasco. Another play announced for an early presentation at the Belasco is Gertrude Nelson Andrews' new play, Through a Window. Mrs. Andrews will assist in the staging of the piece, Charles Ruggles has been engaged for another year with the Belasco company. The Theatrical Treasurers' Association has decided to give another ball. It will take place January 27, 1910, in the Goldberg-Bosley Assembly rooms. It will be one of the social functions of the season. More details later. Ferris Hartman has at last yielded to the popular demand and next week we will have the pleasure of again hearing Mr. Walsh sing the title role in The Love Tales of Hoffman. Are we really to have a new Orpheum, or is it only a periodical joke? At any rate the old theatre has been recarpeted in bright red, and that helps some. Mr. Morosco announces that the Burbank's production of St. Elmo will be made next week, with A. Byron Beasley in the name role. Mr. Morosco hurries forward his own production and issues a warning against its presentation elsewhere. Beatrice Noyes, who will be remembered for her excellent work with the Belasco Company, is now playing the leading role in one of the Eastern Blue Mouse companies. Miss Noyes recently played several performances in The Ringmaster, getting up in the part in twenty-four hours.

AUDITORIUM—When you sit through a most enjoyable evening watching The Man from Home, you most heartily endorse the judgment and patronage of Mr. C. People and his wife, which has made for the play's great popularity and success. Next day, when you think it all over and try to put a mental finger on the "why," you're a bit puzzled. Constructively there isn't any wonderful genius displayed in this play by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, neither is there remarkable brilliancy of dialogue or startling originality of plot, though in no one of these ways is it mediocre by any means. But, nevertheless, there's a world of pithy satire scattered through the lines of The Man; a plenitude of heart interest in the course of the four acts, sufficient comedy of the "light" order to please the most frivolous, and, by no means least, though enumerated last, a lot of very good acting. So finally you conclude that its "just good because," and let it go at that. Fresh from its long "runs" in New York and Chicago, Liebler & Co. have provided a really good all-round company for the tour of the Shubert houses. Henry Hall, who has the title role, makes of his "attorney-at-law, from Kokomo, Ind.," a character most lovable, with the style of unctuous drollness which made Sol Smith Russell so great a public idol. The rugged honesty of the man is appealing, and Mr. Hall makes both his comedy and his heroics seem real. Charles D. Herman plays Grand Duke Vasilivitch very cleverly, imparting a courtliness of demeanor and speech quite ideal in the character. Mary Elizabeth Forbes, who is cast as the title-worshipping American heroine, is no stranger to us, and her work as Miss Granger-Simpson is but another strong credit mark for her. Vaughan Trevor has played several parts similar to the empty-headed English noble of the present cast, but none better than he plays the youthful Hon. Almeric St. Aubyn. Harrington Reynolds is quite at home as Lord Hawcastle, while the Ivanhoff of John Martin is a well-acted bit. Emma Meffert, Bertha Welby and the others in the cast of principals are all well suited to their parts. The play is elaborately and suitably mounted.

BELASCO—The Climbers, by the late Clyde Fitch, is the attraction at the Belasco for the week. The play has been given before at the same house and also at the Burbank. It is an interesting story, but also a depressing one, and does not leave an altogether pleasant taste in the mouth. There are three characters in the play that stand out apart from the rest. These are, the husband, the wife, and the man in love with the wife. Frank Camp as Dick Sterling the husband, is consistent in his interpretation of the role. Mr. Stone plays Ned Warden in a quiet and refined manner that is characteristic of the Belasco's leading man. Miss Magrane does well in the trying role of Blanche Sterling, the wife. Ida Lewis plays Mrs. Hunter; Miss Taylor has the ingenue role. Fay Bainter is also seen to advantage in the part of Jessie Hunter. Other parts are well taken by William Yerance, Richard Vivian, Howard Scott, Charles Ruggles, Grace Gardner and Adele Farrington. The setting of the stage is particularly attractive, especially the hermitage scene. The performance does credit to the company.

BURBANK—Paul Armstrong's play, The Heir to the Hoorah, is being given a very pleasing revival at the Burbank this week. This comedy is not a great play, but it is an interesting one and also very real. We are introduced to a new member of the company this week. David Landau makes his first appearance as Dave Lacy, brother of Joe. His impersonation is excellent and gives promise of fine things in the future. Mr. Beasley is convincing and strong as Joe Lacy. The women's parts are sort of thankless roles, but are well handled by Blanche Hall as Mrs. Joe Lacy; Louise Royce as the mother-in-law; Lovell Alice Taylor as Mrs. Kate Brand, and Margo Duffet as a maiden aunt of the Lacys. Mr. Hartford is the villain. Other parts are well taken by Harry Mestayer, Henry Stockbridge, John Burton and Willis Marks. The piece is well staged and once again Miss Taylor has an opportunity to wear some stunning gowns.

MAJESTIC—The Singing Bandits, a mediocre vehicle being used by Tom Perse and his talented wife, Edith Mason, is the attraction at the Majestic this week. It is a story of love and brigandage in the Italian mountains, and serves to introduce several standards like the sextette from Lucia, which are sung with finish and spirit. Miss Mason's voice is one of those clear, beautiful sopranos, used with utmost intelligence and makes one long to hear her in something worthier of her gifts. Bernice Holmes uses her splendid contralto in as finished, if not as brilliant, a manner as Miss Mason does her soprano. Harold Reeves, a baritone of no mean capabilities and schooling, adds to the small but efficient cast of but eight people.

MASON—After a half week's darkness, the Wyatt playhouse re-opens tonight for three nights and a matinee of Victor Moore & Co., in George M. Cohan's The Talk of New York. This is heralded as a worthy play-sequel to Forty-five Minutes from Broadway, and will re-introduce Mr. Moore in his famous role of Kid Burns. A mention of the piece will be included in next week's letter.

GRAND—Richard Carle wrote a lot of himself into The Tenderfoot, yet somehow Ferris Hartman seems to fit just as well into the role of Zachary Pettibone as did the author-creator. And this without giving tangible evidence of imitation. His microbe-curing lemon and the mule, "Rupert," assist largely in the fun-making. Plot? Oh, what's the use? There's as much of an one as Carle ever supplies, but the play's just a case of "everybody have fun with the star," and they all do. Josie Hart's sartorial display is worthy of note, so for that matter is her acting, and Josephine Islieb does some commendable singing. By far the best solo numbers of the score fall to the lot of Oscar Walch, who plays and sings well the part of the cowboy-soldier of fortune. A good character bit is contributed by Walter Catlett as the Chinese servant, Hop Lee, while his dancing elicits unusual praise. An adequate mounting and the usual Hartman chorus numbers aid in making the offering worth while.

ORPHEUM—The Drums of Doom, a sketch as sordid and dreary as its name forebodes, is splendidly portrayed by Minnie Seligman and her company. Unadulterated misery and despair are depicted in a masterly manner, both in the lines, by Mr. Stuart, and in the acting of Miss Seligman. Nell Lockwood and Hazel Bryson, both well known locally, return with their song material, and are receiving the warmest of welcomes, which they well deserve for good work. The Three Bounding Gordons do excellent work in a series of "bounds." The Bootblack Quartette in fetching songs and honest humor constitute a pair of well received new teams. As she was last week, Mlle. Bianci is the most artistic number on the bill, with her magnificent work. Also, Ed Lavine is a clever number of last week. The balance of the holdovers are Kelso, Walsh and Melrose, with their acrobatic performance, and Hal Godfrey in a new sketch of his own, A Very Bad Boy.

LOS ANGELES—The bill at the Los Angeles is headed by Jack Lallen and May Carson in a skating specialty that is really very clever and quite out of the ordinary. An exceptionally good musical number is given by Willison and Stonaker. They sing some Irish ballads well. All there is to recommend the act of Will J. Harris and Harry Robinson in A Bunch of Kids are a few bright and snappy songs. Walter Spencer and Barney Williams offer a sketch act that is not too bad. Frank J. Parker, assisted by Allen Smith, appears in A Hotel Room in Mid-Air. Parker is a very clever equilibrist. Edith Haney, "the pocket edition comedienne," begins her act with a doll impersonation and adds an Anna Held song and a German character ballad.

FISCHER'S—The Kelly-Massey entertainers at the little First Street house have a diverting little farce in My Uncle from Japan, this week. It concerns the numerous complications arising from the action of an amorous youngster who marries, out of hand, the young woman to whom he has been sent as a matrimonial ambassador by his uncle, who has fallen in love with the girl's picture. John Kelly makes much of the mistreated uncle, while Chas. Figg is suitably cast as the dashing nephew, and Harry Oakes elicits much fun as a henpecked husband. Lillian Massey, Josephine LeRoy and Nan Halperin complete the cast. There are several well-rendered song numbers in which both principals and chorus are seen and heard to advantage.

UNIQUE—Mme. Hentz has changed her mind again (woman's unalterable prerogative). This time it is "owing to urgent request," and the announced change of policy to straight vaudeville has been indefinitely postponed. The patrons of the house are to be favored as of yore with a double vaudeville allotment each week, and one of Al Frank's playlets. This week, The Irish Eskimos is the howling farce presented by Waldo, De Vere and Gates; Carberry and Nelson offer A Night with the T. M. A.'s, while the stock company is seen in A Good Job, with Al Franks, James Spencer, Frank Morton, Annie Bauman and Dawn De Lane in the cast.

FLORENCE EMERY..

DEL MONTE.—The following members of the Land of Nod company, which gave two performances in the T. A. Work Theatre, at Monterey, on Thanksgiving day, reached Del Monte on Monday, the 22nd, and remained until Friday, the 26th: O. L. Mayhood, Mae Adams, Kattryn George, S. E. Rork, wife and daughter, Mary Welch, Dorothy Ellis, Besilee Merrill, George Fox, Ed. Coe and Olive Allen. On Tuesday and Wednesday the Thespians wandered about the beautiful grounds of Del Monte, rode horseback, explored the antiquities of Monterey, or motored along the Seventeen-mile Drive, enjoying their rest greatly. On Saturday evening, November 27, nearly all the guests of the Hotel Del Monte gathered in the Art Gallery to listen to a recital on the fine organ recently installed there. Dr. H. J. Stewart's masterly renderings were appreciated highly. ARTHUR INKERSLEY.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 21.—The only brand new theatrical attractions of the week are to be found at the Garrick, where Max Rodgers opened an engagement, appearing in a musical piece called The Young Turk, and at the Grand, which offers a dramatic version of St. Elmo. Interesting reappearances are those of Havana, with James T. Powers, at the Lyric; Anna Held in Miss Innocence at the Chestnut-street Opera House, and The Girl from Rector's at the Walnut. Remaining over from last week are Maude Adams in What Every Woman Knows; the delightful Barrie comedy in which the popular actress is seen quite at her best at the Broad, this being the final week of her engagements. The big melodramatic success, The Round Up, with its thrilling situations and massive scenic effects, at the Forrest, and Old Dutch, the new musical comedy by Edgar Smith and Victor Herbert, which has met with pronounced success at the Adelphia, where it is given by a large and talented company, headed by Lew Fields in an amusing and meritorious characterization of the title role.

CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 27.—TULANE—Robert Mantell, ably supported by Marie Booth Russell and a capable company, is giving us a veritable feast of Shakespeare's best masterpieces. His repertoire consist of Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, Merchant of Venice, Romeo and Juliet, As You Like It, Louis XI. and Macbeth. In his mastery of the various roles, the star displays great genius and exhibits those scholarly attainments rarely seen upon the modern stage. While there may be some division of opinion as to the conception of just what the immortal bard meant to create, there can be no question as to Mantell being a great actor. His stage presence is striking and his voice has that commanding sweetness which completely electrifies his audiences. He scored heaviest in Hamlet, King Lear, Othello and Macbeth, just as Miss Russell was the more brilliantly conspicuous as Juliet, Rosalind and Portia. The stage settings and costumes were quite in keeping with the period. Fritz Leiber stands out among a company of competent actors in dazzling colors. He is a Shakespearean artist of excellent parts, combining intelligence, handsome physique and a good voice. Guy Lindsey, Geo. Stilwell, Alfred Hastings, Edward Lewers, Genevieve Reynolds and Agnes Elliot Scott are deserving of individual mention for noteworthy support. Mr. Mantell will be seen on the Coast about February, under the management of Howard Smith, who sends regards to Charlie Farrell. Next week—Rose Stahl; Dec. 5, Cohan & Harris Minstrels. CRESCENT.—Al H. Wilson in his new play, Metz in Ireland, is packing the theatre at each performance. Wilson's singing is the conspicuous feature as of yore and his support is strong and capable.

W. L. McCONNELL.

ST. PAUL.—Wm. H. Crane, in Father and the Boys, packed the Metropolitan, both cities, and more than pleased. Mr. Crane looks and acts better than he has for several seasons. The Great Divide, at the Grand, St.

Paul, had a fair week, 21st. Good play but ordinary company. The St. Paul Orpheum, big business and a fine show, all week 21st. The company presenting My Partner's Girl disbands next week. Reason, too expensive a show and long jumps. It's a shame that so good a melodrama and such an excellent company should close so early in the season. "Col." Low Scott and handsome wife, who are doing Europe, will return to this land of snow and ice about Dec. 15th. In the meantime the Metropolitan, St. Paul, has been successfully handled by Asst. Manager Scanlon. Halo Gala, a mid-winter street fair, put on by the merchants of St. Paul, will boost the local show shops week Dec. 6. Geo. Fawcett, in The Great John Ganter, did well at the Lyric, Minneapolis, week 21st. Mr. Fawcett is well remembered as leading man of a summer stock company in 1903, supporting Percy Haswell (his wife.) Mme. Sembrich, supported by La Forge, pianist, and Francis Rogers, baritone, filled the Auditorium 23rd. Blanche Bates, in The Fighting Hope, at Metropolitan, St. Paul, week 28th. We are now enjoying (?) our first real touch of winter. Oh for the sunny clime of "New" Frisco.

AL. G. FLOURNOY.

MISSOULA, Mont., Nov. 27.—We are still here and things look fine, business gets better every week. Manager Lionel announced that no matinee would be given Thanksgiving day because he wanted to go to the football game. There are three old college players in the company so you may imagine what reception greeted his remarks. The game was a good one and we howled ourselves hoarse. Next week Work and Wages will be put on, followed by My Country Sweetheart, then Jim, the Westerner. The company loses Mr. Gear Dec. 6th, when he leaves for Chicago. It looks as though our business manager will go also, for he likes the road better than stock, and is too good an agent to spend his time writing daily news items for stock money. Mr. Moulton is very popular here, and Mr. Lionel accepted his notice with the provision that should nothing turn up before three weeks passed that Moulton was to stay. He wants to go to California. Miss Winston has become a great favorite here. It is not often that a leading woman can pull both ends and the middle at the same time but the feat is being accomplished by her. I could write three or four books on this subject so had better ring off.

CARSON CITY, Nev.—Lake Theatre (Hayes & Murray, proprietors) keeps up its reputation and offers a fine program each week. Ethel Berian is singing the illustrated songs this week, and Mrs. J. E. Muller, the talented pianist, charms the audience with her improvisations on popular themes. Mint Theatre closed its doors last week on account of too much expense and too small a hall. Valley Forge company failed to show up at the opera house. A. H. M.

LONG BEACH, Nov. 26.—Josephine Dillon, who played the summer season here with the Bentley Grand Stock Company, and who has been playing as leading woman in The Christian, in Riverside, returns to Long Beach Thursday evening with the Hollingsworth company. This company opens at the Byde-a-Wyle Theatre Thursday evening in College Chums, and comes to Long Beach with an established reputation for good, clean, clear-cut work.

SAN BERNARDINO, Dec. 1.—At the Unique (J. W. Leonard, lessee and mgr.), the Shuberts last night made their initial offering in this city, presenting The Gay Musician; the production belongs in the class of first class comic opera, and many good soloists are included in the cast. The chorus was tuneful and well costumed. An excellent house thoroughly enjoyed the offering, and doubtless other attractions by the same providers of amusement will follow. At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, owner and mgr.), 10, will be presented The Three Twins. The Temple (new film and vaudeville house) is doing good business, with twice-filled seats nightly.

OAKLAND, Nov. 30.—The Soul Kiss was the attraction at the Macdonough 29-1 and proved a disappointment. The Spoilers is booked 2-4 and The Man of the Hour 5-11. At the Liberty the performance of Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall was also below the high standard that usually marks the Liberty productions. The important role of Dorothy Vernon was taken by Viola Barry, a local actress, who recently returned from England. Miss Barry is a young actress of fine personal appearance and has a promising future before her, but at present she does not possess the necessary qualifications to fulfill such an important role. She appeared nervous at the initial performance, but will most likely gain more self-confidence as the week progresses. The cast is also weakened by the absence of George Friend, who is taking a well earned rest. Sidney Ayres is also under the weather. Robert Harrison was good as Sir Malcom Vernon, but could not show to advantage as the role was one that did not appeal very strongly to the audience. As his bluff old father, Henry Shumer was one of the best characters of all. Harrison Ford, Bishop's latest acquisition, shows up well and is making good. Robert Lawlor as the dwarf jester sustained the role well. Walter Whipple, Andrew Bennison and George Rand had prominent parts and did well. Lady Vernon was a trifle too heavy for Bessie Sankey. Mina Gleason and Edith Lyle in their respective roles of queens of England and Scotland were very satisfactory. The staging was very elaborate and the scenery appropriate. Facing the Music next and then The Judge and the Jury. At the Orpheum business is good. Edwin Stevens in An Evening with Dickens is probably the best thing of the bill, although last week's holdover, Our Boys in Blue, is still the recipient of nightly ovations. Howard's Musical Shetlands, Milt Wood, De Haven Sextette, Tempest and Sunshine trio, Bobby Pandur and Brother and McConnell and Simpson make up the balance of a fine program. Henry Thompson in His Honor the Mayor is scoring a big hit at The Bell and is greeted by big houses at every performance. The entire program is one of interest. The County Fair will be the Christmas attraction and the Admirable Crichton for New Year's at The Liberty. Geo. Hamlin will give a concert at The Liberty, 8, and Fritz Kreisler, 17. The local parlors of N. S. G. W. and N. D. G. W. gave a benefit at The Liberty, 30, and were recompensed with a large sum which will be used as a fund for homeless children. An address was made by Congressman Knowland. The Glee Club of the University of California leaves for an extended southern tour, 24. Miss Ruth Waterman, the celebrated contralto, will give a song recital at Ebel Hall, 7. She will be assisted by Antonio de Grassi, Miss Susan Waterman and Fred Maurer Jr.

LOUIS SCHEELINE.

BERKELEY, Nov. 29.—Through the success of the concert last week in the campus, the Glee Club of the University of California will be able to make the usual southern trip this term and give concerts at the different cities between here and Los Angeles, viz.; Santa Barbara, Dec. 23; Oxnard, 24; Long Beach, 25; Pasadena, 27; San Diego, 28; San Bernardino, 29; Pomona, 30; Redlands, 31; Riverside, January 1; Los Angeles, 2; Porterville, 4; Visalia, 5; Hanford, 6; Fresno, 7; Modesto, 8. The club will leave Berkeley Dec. 22, probably going by boat to Santa Barbara.

CHICO, Nov. 30.—The Man of the Hour, presented by a very ordinary cast, except Felix Haney in his old part, showed last night to a fair house. Next, Land of Nod. Arrangements have been completed between the Butte County Investment Company and the United Investment Company of Reno, Nev., whereby the latter concern has leased the new theatre on Broadway, near Fourth street, which is now nearing completion. The firm which will conduct the theater controls a string of moving picture and vaudeville houses reaching from Boise City, Ida., to Salt Lake City, and also several houses in Nevada. H. Greenwall, representing the lessees, is in Chico today. He states that the playhouse will be opened within a few weeks. The work on the building will be completed tomorrow.

SEATTLE, Nov. 29.—Moore—A large house turned out last night to view The Traveling Salesman, and manifested their joy in the comedy by laughter and applause. It is a good, wholesome story, and Mark Smith is especially suited to the character of Bob Blake. Alhambra—Dark. Grand—Seattle for the third time is being delighted by George Cohan's Forty-five Minutes from Broadway, and two big audiences were in order at the Grand yesterday. Charley Brown is Kid Burns this year, and is extremely good in the part. The rest of the company is up to the standard, and the songs never grow old. Seattle—At the Old Cross Roads is being given an excellent interpretation by the Russell & Drew stock company. Its action is comparatively quiet, with a delightful southern setting, and it is a pleasing departure from the highly colored melodramas usually presented at the Seattle. Lois—The Warrens of Virginia is having its first production in Seattle at the hands of the Lois stock players. The crowds who went to the Lois out of curiosity to see this Belasco play were greatly surprised at both the play and the manner in which the D. S. Lawrence Co. handled it. The play is great in every respect and the production is truly wonderful for a stock company. It is good enough to warrant a two-week's run. Orpheum—Edwina Barry heads the bill. With her company she produces The Home-Breaker, in which she takes the part of Dotty Plumdaff, a domestic with a penchant for kissing every man she meets and then macing him for his photograph. Other good ones on the big bill are Fay, two Coleys and Fay, minstrels; the Brahms Ladies' Quartet, the Potter-Hartwell Trio, three very agile and graceful young folks; Jock McKay, a Scotch comedian of the Harry Lauder kind and quality; Carlotta, the Human Dragon, and The Tossing Austins. Majestic—Albers' polar bears, twelve of them, make a great big feature of the Majestic Theatre bill. Other strong features of the bill are offered by the Brothers Whitman, flexible wonders; Gertrude Van Dyke, the soloist with two distinct singing voices; Robisch and

Harry Bernard

The best producing musical comedian on the Coast is Harry Bernard, who is achieving a sensational success at the American Theatre with a series of short comedies, of which an attractive chorus is a great feature. Mr. Bernard is a very unctuous comedian, and during the past two years he has played long engagements around San Francisco with unvarying success. At present he has ordered several new comedies, and the first one is now finished. It is from the pen of Will Carlton and will have its first production next week. Other new pieces will follow in rapid succession. Mr. Bernard's company is noted for the ability of the actors, the clever, fine work of the chorus, and the real humor brought out so plentifully in the performance.

Correspondence

TACOMA, Nov. 27.—Tacoma is to have a new vaudeville theatre, situated on Pacific Ave., between 11th and 13th Sts., two blocks distant from the present theatre district. Peter Sandberg, who is erecting a seven-story building on the property, has leased the two ground floors to an Eastern vaudeville enterprise for a period of five years. N. C. Darling, for the past three months manager of the Pantages Theatre in this city, leaves next week for Denver to take charge of the Pantages Theatre there, relieving Manager W. J. Timmons, who will return to Tacoma. Mr. Timmons has a host of friends in Tacoma who will be glad to see him on duty at Pantages once again. King Dodo returned to the Tacoma Theatre Nov. 21, drawing the usual Sunday night crowd. Wright Lorimer, in The Shepherd King, opened 23rd for an engagement of two nights. The play was interesting from a historical and scenic standpoint, and was well acted by a large and capable company. Mr. Lorimer made an excellent impression here and the play was well patronized. The Traveling Salesman, at this house Thanksgiving afternoon and evening, displayed his samples and "delivered the goods" at the same time. The theatre was decorated with flags and pennants for "out in front." The real thing in the Traveling Salesman line was present in the shape of the Tacoma association, who filled the boxes and one hundred seats in the parquet. The play, given to an S. R. O. house, was so pleasing that a return engagement has been secured for Dec. 11. Mark Smith as Bob Blake was a big hit, and the other male members of the company were well cast. Miriam Nesbit created an excellent impression and Diana Hunker contributed a well acted character sketch. Interesting to the older patrons of the Tacoma was the fact that Mr. Smith's father, Mark Smith II., was the popular baritone singer with the Duff Opera Co. that opened the Tacoma Theatre in January, 1890. Tonight the always popular Forty-five Minutes from Broadway was greeted by an enthusiastic audience. The company suffers perhaps in comparison with those formerly appearing here in the play, but was in the main satisfactory. Charley Brown, who played the part of Kid Burns, is a former resident of Tacoma, and while here was the guest of his brother, city agent of one of the transcontinental railway lines. Coming attractions—The Bugle Band, Nov. 30; In Dreamland, Dec. 1; Kreisler, violinist, recital, Dec. 3; The Third Degree, Dec. 4-5. At the Pantages this week, Prof. Herbert's trained dogs and cats were a big drawing card and the act an enjoyable one. Coyne & Tinton had a clever athletic act. Disguised as clowns, Del Torelli & Glisando gave a musical act that was unique as well as comical. Eddie Redway's act was a laugh getter. He was assisted by Gertrude Lawrence. Kane & Adams in musical nonsense, and James R. Walter in character singing, made up the balance of the bill. Next week—Tyrolean Sextette, The Three Lucifers, dancers; Moore & St. Claire, in comedy; Emery & Silvern, acrobats; Fisher & Burkhart, musicians, and Cornym, with his blockhead family. The bill at the Grand was a diversified one. Sydney Deane & Co., in a playlet embracing humor and pathos, demonstrated what Christmas on Blackwell's Island might be. A clever acrobatic act was given by the Brothers Damm. Nellie Burt offered some good character songs and dances. Johnnie Hoey and Jeannette Mozor pleased with a sketch introducing some clever dancing. Max Duffex had a contortionist, including a musical, stunt. George H. Wood, the black face comedian, got the laughs as usual. Next week Myrtle Burns and company, sharpshooters; The Bohemian Sextette; Nat Nazarro Troupe; Gertie Everette, comedienne; Wilson and De Mondeville.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Dec. 1.—The Shuberts have secured a lease on the Isis Theatre, the largest and finest house here, and one of the most attractive on the Coast, and it is their intention to book at least two of their attractions in here every week. The Man from Home will appear here for two nights, Dec. 14-15, to be followed by Charles Cherry in The Bachelor. The house was built some twelve years ago by John C. Fisher, of Floradora fame, and was known for a number of years as the Fisher Opera House. The Theosophists have had the house for the past four years, during which time no traveling companies have played the theatre. A boycott was placed on the theatre at the time they secured control of the house by the labor unions here, but this has been raised for the Shuberts, as the management of the house will employ nothing but union labor. W. B. Gross, known all over the country as King Edward, owing to his striking resemblance to his Majesty King Edward VII, has been appointed local manager for the Shuberts. Mr. Gross was for years connected with Shore Acres and knows the show business from A to Z. Mr. Gross of late has been acting as assistant manager of the Garrick, and has a large following here. His many friends, both in and out of the profession, will be glad to learn of his new appointment and wish him much success. The Garrick is dark until Dec. 5-6, when The Three Twins appear here. Manager Jack Dodge is wearing the smile that won't come off, as there is some advance sale. Looks like S. R. O. both nights. The Singing Bandits, with Persee and Mason, follow, Dec. 7-8. Charlie King and his excellent stock company are doing good business at the Pickwick this week, with Florence Roberts' great success, The Strength of the Weak. The company, as usual, are all handling their parts in a commendable manner. Miss Rambeau continues to be the bright twinkling star, and gives an excellent portrayal of her difficult part this week. Chas. King, Pietro Sasso and Frank Bonner are also conspicuous for their good work. Anna Eva Fay is the headliner at the Queen this week, and the crowds are just flocking to see her. On account of the enormous business, Manager Donnelan is running special matinees daily. The balance of the bill is below the average and consists of the Floydells, comedy gymnasts, who have nothing new or startling to offer, and Dorothy Vaughn, who has a fair singing act. Motion pictures and the Queen's Peerless Orchestra conclude.

THOMAS HEFFRON has become stage director for Vaughn Glaser in his Cleveland stock.

G. L. SCHLESINGER, who is regarded as one of the greatest box office generals of the country, with a wonderful record in the Colonial Theatre, Chicago, is this season manager, back with The Yankee Prince Co.

Van Ness Theatre

The most original genius of the American stage is here this week with a great show, which he has called The Yankee Prince. It is a show that is as much a reflection of his personality as he is himself. The show is both an entertainment and an achievement. Every line, every song, every bit of business is the output of the agile brain of George M. Cohan (age something like 27), and the chief part is played by Cohan himself, and although he has generously written fat parts for his leading people, he holds his own without any forcing to the front. He has many imitators, but no equals. He has a peculiar voice, a peculiar walk, somewhat theatrically exaggerated, and a peculiar way of delivering his speeches and talking his songs, but the genius of the man is so compelling that it comes pretty near to this condition—that the Cohan way is right because Cohan does it. Anyway, this is the feeling that takes possession of you. In the strong support, Tom Lewis and Sam J. Ryan, almost one and undetachable for years, are the two most prominent. These clever actors are artists and it is unnecessary to dwell upon their work, it is so well known. Jerry J. Cohan, the father of George M., is a splendid actor of gentle dignity, and Mrs. Jerry is more than a good character woman, and her Mrs. Fielding is a finely shaded comedy effort. Lila Rhodes, also of the Cohan family, is a young girl who was called on suddenly to take Josephine Cohan's place, and her ability will grow with her opportunities. As she is now, she is a dainty little woman who can dance amazingly well. The rest of the company are pleasing, and the chorus large and expert. The production is really royal and there are so many features of business introduced that these are worthy of a special article. One that is most vivid in our memory—the burlesque pantomime of the marriage of Percy and Evelyn—is a most graphic, original and illuminating piece of business.

Valencia Theatre

In the days when the old Columbia flourished on Powell street, there used to come out occasionally as leading support a fine looking, pleasant and well groomed young Englishman, who always left a very pleasant impression. In the interim he has been plugging away and is now a star in Clyde Fitch's comedy, The Bachelor. His name is Charles Cherry, and his personality is just as agreeable, his clothes have the same well fitting appearance and his satisfaction with his work is just about as evident, and not at all disagreeable to the audience. He knows he is a good actor and is sufficiently modest about it. The play is a real Clyde Fitch exposition of subtle satire, up-to-date slang and woman's idiosyncracies, not to mention a genuinely clever reflection of the ways and thoughts of men. It is always safe to say that Fitch is unapproachable when it comes to creating women. But he falls down on his men—yes, he really does. Sure! But I have the temerity to make a stand. I believe his men are just about as accurately depicted. Surely Mr. Cherry's bachelor is a real, true reflection from life, and the bits furnished by the two boys—one, the slangy, fresh office kid, and the other, the ambitious, selfish, over confident youth who thinks he thinks with a mature man's mind—are about as clever as anything that even the most manly and vigorous of our playwrights have builded. These two youths are played admirably by Ralph Morgan and Charles Laite. As a contemporary so aptly put it on Monday morning, one star was advertised and two appeared. Ruth Maycliffe was the unexpected luminary. She possesses a daintiness, a wholesome charm and an apparently spontaneous lightweight humor that is simply irresistible. Her portrayal of the girl who changes her name and goes out as a typewriter, to support her mother and put her brother through college, and then falls in love with her employer, is one of the finest, most ideally balanced results we have been supplied with. She is going to the top fast. Mrs. Randell, the mother, was sympathetically played by Lillian Paige, and the Hilda Flint was amusingly burlesqued by Alice Riker.

Alcazar Theatre

The Warrens of Virginia, tomorrow night, closes its second big week. As the name implies, it is a southern drama laid during the civil war, and is characteristically Belasco in atmosphere. The plot surrounds the love affair of a southern belle, Agatha, daughter of General Warren, played prettily by Evelyn Vaughan, and a young northern lieutenant, Ned Burton, portrayed by John Ince. The end is very pleasing. Howard Hilsman, as the old southern general, Buck Warren, was at his best; Evelyn Vaughan, as usual, was acceptable as the southern maiden, in love with Lieutenant Burton, the part played by Mr. Ince. The character of the northern lieutenant is not altogether that of a hero, and is a bad one for a leading man to play. The scenery and the musical numbers were beautiful and worth while.

Princess Theatre

The third week of the Rich Mr. Hoggenger is closing in a manner satisfactory to every one concerned with this bill of fun and music. C. William Kolb is doing excellently as Mr. Hoggenger, whose marital aspirations cause so much of the merriment. Lillian Berri, Carlton Chase, Sydney de Grey, Olga Stech and the other favorites of the company are making hits nightly. It will be some time before another attraction succeeds this popular piece.

Garrick Theatre

It is a far cry from the Soul Kiss of last week to the Shepherd King of this. The initial letters of each word of the title of the two bills are the same. There the resemblance stops short, like grandfather's clock, never to go again. The play that has held the stage of the Garrick during the past six nights to houses of a size to make both managers and actors glad is one of the unique pieces of contemporary dramatic literature. It demonstrates, as does Ben Hur, that Biblical material, if properly presented, has a greater charm for the world and his wife than has that same material between the covers of the book of books. This fact is obviously not newly discovered by the writer. That astute manager of everything that makes money by appealing to the dear public, William A. Brady, has erstwhile noted the same thing, while pulling in the shekels with attractions varying from a prize-fight to Way Down East. If the Shepherd King did not have something very appealing about it is dollars to doughnuts that the eagle eye of Brady would not have seen an opportunity to point a moral and adorn a tale with the drama in which Wright Lorimer and his efficient supporting company are doing such pleasing work. As a theatrical David, Lorimer is quite beyond criticism. It is not stretching the truth to say he looks the part—he acts it, too. The entire support, from the leading woman to the supers, are deserving of the same commendation. Spectacularly, the play is the equal of Ben Hur, without, of course, the big racetrack scene. As a book The Shepherd King is far superior to the dramatized form of General Lew Wallace's novel. Then, too, the actors in this company can and do act. It is seldom that one has the pleasure of listening to so many players, all with good voices. None of them talk through their noses. Lorimer has an unusually pleasing voice of exceptional cadence and musical quality. The David of the play is at every moment the blonde-haired hero, who invariably has the last word, and who never fails to take the scene from everybody whenever he makes an entrance. David's lowly home near Bethlehem, his celebrated encounter with Goliath, the heavy-weight of Gath, whose free-for-all standing challenge was taken by the youthful psalmist with dire results to the challenger and holder of the belt, the trials of the romantic hero of Israel's golden age while in the palace of Saul at Gibeah, the meeting with the Witch of Endor, and an interpolated love story, these are the material out of which the spectacle is woven. David's unwarranted treatment of Uriah, the Hittite warrior, with whose wife, Bathsheba, the psalmist was enamored, and other dark stains on the character of the shepherd signer, are not touched upon. The higher critics of the Bible might object to the present play as not being strictly in accord with the materials contained in the Scriptures, but the dear public has no such objection to make. Wright Lorimer and his big company have been playing this one bill for lo these six years, and verily it seemeth not a thing unlikely that these mummers shall play this self-same bill for six years more. Anyhow, the company is clothed in purple and fine linen on and off and appears to be eating regularly, so, as long as the actors, managers and the people who pay to get in are satisfied, the higher critics may go hang.

D. J. GRAUMAN returned from the East last Wednesday.

LORRAINE BUCHANAN is playing in vaudeville for a short time.

KELLAR, the magician, who has retired from theatrical work, has bought a residence in Los Angeles. It is at Seventh and Wilshire Place, the house being two stories, English architecture, with large lot. The reported price was $18,000. Mr. Kellar expects to build a garage and remodel the second floor of the house, and do some fine decorating throughout the residence.

Fritz Scheff, the brilliant singer who comes to the Van Ness Theatre, week of December 13.

Personals

MAE KEANE was married in San Jose last Tuesday to a non-professional.

LAST week in Oakland, Lena Salinger, with The Three Twins Company, suffered the loss of $150 worth of new furs.

MANAGER CLARENCE DROWN, of the Los Angeles Orpheum, with his family, are on the way to Honolulu for an outing of several weeks.

ROY APPLGATE, a former Seattle theatrical man, is in charge of the Charles Cherry company, now playing this city with the coast to follow.

WALTER HOFF SEELEY is now in Los Angeles and expects to visit Salt Lake and Denver before his return next week.

B. R. CLAWSON, JR., a well known circus and theatrical man, who at one time was an extensive house manager in Chicago, is ahead of The Bachelor for the Shuberts this season.

HERBERT CARR, a well-known character actor, died in Washington city last Monday. Carr was seen here in 1903 with Nance O'Neil, and last year on the Coast with Mary Mannering in Glorious Betsy.

ARTHUR LOTTO, who for years was identified closely with San Francisco theatricals and who is regarded as an exceptionally brilliant newspaper man, is in town ahead of John P. Slocum's big musical show, The Gay Musician.

MANAGER W. M. RUSSELL, of Seattle, has gone to Portland to assume temporary charge of the Portland Theatre, relieving Frank Hood, who has been over in Portland since the new house first opened, and who now returns to the treasurership of the Seattle Theatre.

SIDNEY HERBERT IZOD, residing at the Congress hotel on Ellis street, who is a very valuable and artistic member of the Kolb & Dill Co., and is known as Sidney de Grey, has petitioned the superior court for permission to adopt the name of Sidney Herbert de Grey, as he considers it a more suitable name for one of his profession. He also says that the name of de Grey is an old family name and has been adopted by numerous members of his family.

Vaudeville

The Orpheum

The Orpheum bill this week is very entertaining. The chief interest centers around W. H. Thompson in his latest sketch, Pride of Regiment. Mr. Thompson is a good actor, but the vehicle he has now is not up to his ability. How it could run fourteen months at the Haymarket, London, is beyond me; however, that is what the program states. It seems a shame to waste the talents of three such good actors as Mr. Thompson, Miss Allen and Mr. Webber, to say nothing of the time it would take to play a good sketch. Vittoria and Giorgetta open the bill and do some very clever hand balancing. The comedy is very far fetched though and could well be dispensed with. Fraulein Katchen Loiset, with a pretty voice and some beautiful pigeons, also a Boss of the Road dog came strong into favor. It is a neat, pleasing act, with a novel finish, the dog impersonating a German student, a tramp, a mother-in-law, etc., in a very clever manner. Quinlan and Mack in a laughable act, The Traveling Dentist, are seen to especially good advantage; Hymer and company, Mabel McCane, Ben Welch (always good) and The Two Bobs, with a reel depicting the tea industry, finishes the bill.

The National

The National has another bill this week composed of headliners. The Godlowski troupe of Russian dancers open the bill, followed by a special moving picture, which is very interesting. Bradlee Martin and his excellent little company in a very funny comedy, Jessie, Jack and Jerrie, do good work. Mr. Martin in the character of Jerrie is at his best and that is excellent. The act is quite out of the ordinary, full of funny situations, good lines and—good actors. Jessie Courtney, played by Mrs. Martin, is capably done. Mr. Wallace as Jack is good in support. Billy Clark in Cork is as popular as he always is in a San Francisco house. He has been good for from eight to ten encores a performance during the past week. That speaks for the character of his work. Crimmins and Gore, favorites from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are as entertaining as ever. Miss Gore sacrifices her good looks to play the part of the tough girl, which she plays with unusual ability. She gets a laugh out of every line. Mr. Crimmins can certainly dance. Their act is very funny, their songs make bulls eyes, and the entire turn is a success from start to finish. The three vagrants sing and play a return date this week. The five Malberus acrobats have a finished act that is deserving of high praise. They work quickly, neatly and with no posing. It is all work with them the whole time they are on. The boy deserves special mention and will make a name for himself in vaudeville there is no doubt. Not forgetting the orchestra and the pictures, the whole show at the National may be called a success.

Pantages-Central

Packed houses have been the rule since the Central has opened on Pantages time. Manager Tiffany has some good ones to offer to the public, and there will be no disappointed patrons if future shows keep up to the standard set by the one of this week. Edith Stanley, as the piano girl, has a number which is highly original, artistic and quite in a class by itself. The young lady plays and sings her own songs. She has a very pleasing personality and has the faculty of looking stunning in her gowns, which are works of the dressmaker's art. Miss Stanley is a whole show in herself, and if the rest of the bill were poor, which it is not, she would still be worth the price of admission. The Lerollos, wire equilibrists, are an exceedingly clever couple. Both perform some clever stunts. To see the lady member of the team walk on the slack wire is something that baffles belief. It has to be seen to be believed. Bunchu and Alger are two Kentucky girls with voices. And those girls do sing! George Winfield and company have a very racy French farce, Am I Your Wife? It is a clever comedy. Both Mr. and Mrs. Winfield are clever folks. He gives a clever bit of acting as a drunken twin brother that is a gem in its way. Charles Kembling, with his illustrated songs, is a favorite. Shayne and King have an amusing Hebrew act. La Bella Italia troupe share honors with the Levollas in being features of the bill. Both acts are entirely different, yet each reaches the same grade of excellence in its particular way as does the other. Rosa Bella is the world's greatest tambourine soloist, and as a harpist is far above the ordinary. This troupe has an artistic setting that is quite unusual. Besides being well dressed the members composing the turn are all good musicians. There is a small boy, five years old, who plays the violin and who directs the music in a manner that would reflect credit upon an old professional.

American Theatre

Opening the extremely good bill this week is an entirely new and novel act, The Stellings, European comedy hat throwers. Hats of all shapes and sizes, old and new, trimmed and untrimmed (while you wait). Such a collection of hats! And every one used for some comedy stunt. Mrs. Stelling has a gown for each performance, each one more beautiful and artistic than the other. They are creations of Parisian art. The Stellings make one enjoy thoroughly the fifteen minutes they show. Williams and Dale one would expect from their billing to be two song and dance artists. Not at all. They are a good sister act. Miss Dale has a very rich and deep contralto voice; her song, The Sweetest Story Ever Told, is old, but never tiresome when sung as she sings it. Belle Williams you all know. She is a clever-noon shouter and is a real comedian. The Imperial Musical Comedy Company, with Harry Barnard as star, is presenting McCabe in Paris, which is the best they have done so far. It is a scream from start to finish. The company are shown to fine advantage. Mr. Barnard is a funny comedian and gets his fun over the footlights. He has a good mate in Jim Rowe. Both men are clever and work very well together. May Barnard and Florence Brown are both very good and handle their parts as well as any one could. Miss Barnard is a very pretty woman. The chorus deserves special mention for their work. Each and every girl shows she takes an interest in the show. The wardrobe looks fresh and clean. Each girl is a good dancer and, in fact, Mr. Barnard deserves credit for the clever work the entire company, and Miss Gerré Gerard also for the musical numbers. The names Colby and May for years has been in big letters. Mr. Colby in his ventriloquist act is very amusing and has some very clever talk. Miss May, the dancing doll, has a perfect make-up and is very clever. Bandy and Fields, known from coast to coast, are renowned for their dancing. Mr. Bandy has the cup for the world's greatest buck dancing. He can do anything with his feet in the realm of terpsichore. His imitations of funny walks were exceedingly clever. Miss Fields can dance too and hold her own with her clever partner. Following were La Velle and Grant, exponents of physical culture. The posing of the team is very artistic and Mr. La Velle's muscular posing in particular classy. Both do stunts to show wonderful development of muscles and strength. The pictures and orchestra are both splendid this week. Three packed houses a day prove the popularity of the house.

upon which they are erecting a vaudeville theatre, on Monday leased property situated on the south side of Eddy street, between Powell and Mason. The property has a frontage of 62 feet on Eddy street, with a depth of 137.6 feet, running through almost to Market street. A lease on the intervening property has also been secured, which will give an entrance from Market street. The tenure of the lease on both properties is said to be about fifteen years, for which a total rental of approximately $300,000 is to be paid. The lessees will at once erect a class A vaudeville theatre, with balcony, which will have a seating capacity of about 1,000.

Class A Building For Seeley & Morris

Construction work on the American Music Hall, the new vaudeville theatre to be conducted under the direction of the William Morris company, will, according to promise by O'Brien & Werner, the architects, be completed by July 1 next. The building will be strictly class A in every detail. The front facade will be worked out in white terra cotta, set off with bronze. The seating capacity will be 2,200 and the interior has been designed with a view for the comfort of the patrons, the chairs being larger and set farther apart than is the rule in most San Francisco theatres. There will be a balcony and gallery and a large number of stage boxes and loges. A sumptuous lounging room and promenade foyer will be placed under the balcony.

Story of Guilty

Guilty? as a vehicle for Donald Bowles in vaudeville gives him the opportunity to run the entire gamut, from airy light comedy to pathos, and finally to the most intensely dramatic. The sketch has sometimes been likened to Raffles, but it resembles the former only in the fact that its hero is a most debonair burglar. In all respects the plot is absolutely original. The story deals with the downward career of an attractive young man through various combinations of circumstances, till finally he serves time for murder. It could have no more fitting title, for the audience is left to render judgment at the fall of the curtain. Guilty?

News From George Gill

Mine host, Chris Ward, of the St. James, was in receipt of cheering news from George Gill, who is taking treatment in the Pottenger Sanitarium, Monrovia, near Los Angeles. The letter reads as follows:

Monrovia, Cal., Nov. 28, 1909.

My Dear Ward:—My headquarters are here, where I am expected to remain for some time. Well they ordered me to bed as soon as I arrived. I suppose it will last for a couple of weeks and then they will let me get up for awhile. My pulse on arriving was 130, weight 134, with my clothes on, so I have lost 24 pounds somewhere; my temperature is normal. Oh, but it is cold here at nights and we sleep with both sides of the bungalow wide open! and at 6.45 a. m. I have to get up and take a sponge bath, and the water is from a deep well—Oh! Oh! Oh! I have my

Personals

JOHN CORT is in town for a few days.

Mack Swain will close his Santa Cruz stock Sunday night, and will re-organize at once for the road.

MABELLE BAKER is on the road to recovery. Miss Baker, formerly leading woman with Kolb & Dill, is rapidly convalescing, after eight weeks in the St. Francis Hospital with a broken leg. She succeeded Adele Rafta on a moment's notice and made more than good. Nat Wagner, manager of Kolb & Dill, told Miss Baker her place was open at any time she's ready. But she may go East for she has received a wire from a very prominent New York firm with a flattering offer to join a new production, to be produced in January. "There," said Miss Baker, "if I were in want and could work, I'd never be lucky enough to get such an offer. Miss Baker is still on crutches and will probably be for a couple of weeks.

Ethel Barrymore Has a Strapping Son

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Mrs. Russell Colt, known to the theatre going public as Ethel Barrymore, became the mother of a son today at the home of August Belmont, where the Colts are staying.

Shuberts Gain New Time

The Shuberts are gradually adding to their Coast time. The Gay Musician broke in at the Garrick in San Diego last Monday, and likewise played Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo on the way up. These have heretofore been syndicate strongholds. Whether or not they will be "open door" houses from now on is not known.

The Orpheum

The Orpheum announcement for next week is worthy of the closest perusal. Eva Taylor, who last distinguished herself in this city in the Frohman farce, Chums, will appear in the very amusing comedietta, Mrs. Jones Smith Carey. She will be assisted by Laurence Grattan, Earl Ford and Blanche Craig. Florence Bindley, the gifted and versatile comedienne, will introduce her musical monologue, An Afternoon At Home. She personates a number of celebrities and gives several songs and dances and a Xylophone solo, and winds up with an imitation of a French vocalist accompanying herself on the piano. Stella H. Morrisini, a statuesque English beauty and one of the best animal trainers in Europe, will introduce her wonderful leaping Siberian Wolf Hounds and several little trained Shetland Ponies, and the Four Floods, announced as acrobatic merry-makers, will indulge in an entertainment of skill and originality. One of the most interesting features of next week's programme will be the first presentation in this city of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's one-act drama Waterloo, by William H. Thompson, which was one of the late Sir Henry Irving's greatest successes. His support will include Evangeline Irving, a younger sister of Isabel Irving. Next week will conclude the engagements of the Two Bobs, Quinlan & Mack and Mabel McCane. A recently imported series of Orpheum motion pictures will be the finale to a thoroughly enjoyable performance.

Valencia Theatre

Charles Cherry and the original company from the Maxine Elliott theatre, New York, will make their last appearances in Clyde Fitch's delightful comedy, The Bachelor, this Saturday afternoon and evening and at a special matinee Sunday, Julian Edwards' comic opera, The Gay Musician, will begin a run limited to two weeks. This Week
THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK

John P. Slocum, is now in its second season and ran last year for one hundred nights at Wallack's theatre, New York, to capacity audiences. It has also been presented in the principal cities of the country at the leading theatres, and everywhere it has met with lavish praise from both public and press. One of the principal charms of The Gay Musician is that it is of a neat and most refined order, vulgarity finding no place in its presentation. In Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and other large cities The Gay Musician has proved the hit of the season, and its present tour embraces what is known as "City time," for engagements of one or more weeks. Among the principals are Texas Guinan, the comic opera prima donna; Harry Benham, the baritone; Roger Gray, comedian and dancer; Margaret Crawford, character actress and singer; Leo. H. White, W. Flave Ryan, Freda Klingel, ingenue, and others prominent on the stage. Herman Heller's splendid orchestra will be augmented for The Gay Musician and the coming engagement bids fair to be one of the big musical events in the amusement history of the city. The usual matinee will be given on Saturday. The Man from Home, the comedy that has had a record-breaking run in both New York and Chicago, will follow The Gay Musician at the Valencia Theatre.

Alcazar Theatre

A Message from Mars, which is to be the next offering, commencing Monday night, was written by Richard Ganthony, and after running two years in London it had a year's brilliant success in New York and then was sent on tour. Just as soon as it was released for stock company use, Frederic Belasco secured it for the Alcazar. It tells the story of Horace Parker, an Englishman on whom fortune bestowed some of life's most substantial blessings, including youth, perfect health, vast wealth, a pleasing exterior and a charming fiancée. But he is possessed of two vices which are by no means uncommon. They are an offensive self-conceit and a selfishness that seems to be without limit. To give an adequate production of this play, which has been aptly designated The Beautiful, the Alcazar's unexcelled artistic and mechanical resources are severely taxed, as the staging calls not only for elaborate pictorial effect, but demands numerous trick devices which are essential to a coherent development of the plot. By one of these, in the first act Parker is instantly transformed from a richly-garbed gentleman into a shabby beggar, and the audience wonders how the change has been operated. All the Alcazar favorites and a number of extra people will be in the cast.

John Ince, as Parker, will have the most subtle role he has yet been given in the Sutter-street playhouse, and in the title part Louis Bennison will be afforded opportunity to do some great acting. Charles Dow Clark will portray a tramp, a character that some critics have pronounced the best drawn in the play. Evelyn Vaughan will be seen as Parker's fiancée, Howard Hickman as one of her suitors, Bessie Barriscale as a petite maid, and Grace Travers and Adele Belgarde will also be seen to good advantage.

Dick Jose Has Brilliant Opening

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 25.—Into the gold of the present Bridgeport theatrical season came Silver Threads at Jackson's Theatre last night when Richard J. Jose reappeared here after several years absence in Martin V. Merle's new domestic drama. Merle, in Silver Threads, has fitted Jose with a vehicle that spells success with a capital "S," for it is a play destined for popularity and a long career. After the surfeit of new-thought, graft, persecution and problem plays, "Silver Threads" comes as a decided relief. Its homeliness, directness and heart-interest all ring true, for it is a simple tale, simply told. "Silver Threads" unfolds the story of John Laurie, his brother, Ben, and John's two daughters, Ruth and Kathleen. Around the lives of this little family, Merle has entwined a story that is replete with dramatic and comedy situations, and into it he has woven the songs of old—the songs that Jose has made classic. A large and appreciative audience enjoyed the star, his company and the play last night, and judging from the reception they accorded the production all expectations were fulfilled. In Ben Laurie, Jose has found a most congenial role. As the lovable old blacksmith he has created a character that stands alongside of Denman Thompson's famous Old Homestead character, and the late Jim Herne's uncle, Nat Berry, in Shore Acres. By his big, jovial, tender personality, he won the hearts of the audience, handling his dramatic and his comedy scenes with equal ease and ability. In the first act he sang, When You and I Were Young, Maggie, and Silver Threads Among the Gold, the play being based on the latter song. In the third act he introduced, with excellent effect, Abide With Me, Belle Brandon and Dudley. In all of his songs, Jose was applauded to the echo. The star found splendid support at the hands of Leslie Stowe, who offered an excellent portrayal of John Laurie. Louise Kent brought both charm and power to the role of Ruth Laurie, and her change to the part of Mme. Paulina was an artistic as well as a dramatic success. Her gowns were revelations. Eva Condon was a sweet and winsome Kathleen, playing with a girlish charm that was most refreshing, and Edith M. Cook, as Aunt Eliza B., was excellent in the quaint and original character. W. D. Stone was a droll and humorous Toby Trotter, and John Miesen was sufficiently natural as Robert Osbourne, the heavy. In fact, Miesen was most artistic in a difficult role. Hobart Cavanaugh, as Al Carey, the youngster who thinks himself a man for all of his 20 years, was one of the most refreshing features of the cast. Cavanaugh plays the boy naturally and artistically, with the proper amount of enthusiasm and youth. The production is perfect from a scenic standpoint, the quaint old sitting room in act one being a marvel of accuracy and detail. Mr. Jose has every reason to be proud of his play, his production and his company, and Bridgeport is to be congratulated on having seen this excellent attraction.

HARRY S. HOPPING mourns the loss of his mother, Mrs. Mary L. Hopping, whose death occurred at her home, 5226 East North street, Indianapolis, Ind., November 10, after an illness of four weeks, from Brights disease. The funeral was conducted at the family residence and interment made at Crown Hill cemetery, Nov. 13, 1909.

WHEN N. C. Goodwin appears next spring in London in the new musical comedy by C. M. S. McLellan and Ivan Caryll, he will be not merely a salaried star but an investor as well. He has effected a partnership arrangement for this venture with George Edwards, under whose management the scheme is projected, and he will hold exclusively the American rights. Mr. Goodwin will devote a part of the present winter to his mining affairs, but will also find time for a siesta at his Los Angeles home.

William Morris Coming

Walter Hoff Seely has received a wire from William Morris saying that the latter will leave New York today for this city in order to talk over with Mr. Seely the plans for the new American music hall. The site in Ellis Street immediately back of the Orpheum has been chosen, and work has already been started. Morris advises Seely that he will arrange for a tour of Harry Lauder, the "great Scotchman," to this city and that the vaudeville star will open the American music hall. Further news is to the effect that a lease has just been closed by Morris in St. Louis. He has taken over the Coliseum Theatre there and it, with a vaudeville house in Cincinnati, will be opened next Monday by the Morris corporation. Still another Morris theatre will be established in Indianapolis.

Big Thing If Carried Out

NEW YORK, Nov. 20. A theatrical company, which will be made up exclusively of Broadway stars right down to the chorus, and which will outshine even the Lambs all-star company, is being organized by the Shuberts for a transcontinental tour at the conclusion of the present theatrical season. The company will include every musical comedy star now under Shubert contract—Lew Fields, Sam Bernard, Eddie Foy, Frank Daniels, James T. Powers, Andrew Mack, William Norris, Lulu Glaser, Louise Gunning, Blanche Ring, Marguerite Clark and others—and in the chorus will be players of note like Flora Parker, Harriet Stanton, Hattie Lorrain, Elsie Ryan, Daisy Dumont, Florence Martin, Edith Decker, Clara Palmer, Winnie O'Connor, Gertrude Darret and a score of others now singing in Broadway musical comedies. Both Lee and J. J. Shubert will travel with the company as managers. This is the first time Lee Shubert has found it possible to leave New York long enough to make a trip to the Pacific Coast. J. J. Shubert crossed the continent a short time ago to perfect a chain of theatres to the Pacific Coast, and many of these theatres, owned by the Shuberts, have never been seen by Lee Shubert. Lee Shubert declared that the organization of this monster company will not merely be a money-making enterprise. He said: "Of course, the expense of this undertaking will be enormous, and we are not looking for profit."

Spotlights

As the Sun Went Down, by Geo. D. Baker, which Arthur C. Aiston is sending on tour this season and which will appear here, has had the advantage of having one of the strongest companies that can be gotten together. Estha Williams, whose work in the leading role of At the Old Cross Roads, had much to do with making that play an eight years winner, is being featured, and in her support are such well-known people as Edwin Walter, W. A. Whitecar, Arthur E. Chatterdon, Phil Connor, Arthur W. Bentley, R. F. Sullivan, William Sexton, Jenny Dunbar, Flora Byan, Margaret Millar and several others of equal note. The Lee-Lash Scenic Company of New York have furnished the scenery, which has been gotten out under the personal direction of W. F. Hamilton, formerly of the firm of Moses & Hamilton. The tour is to be a long one, including a trip to the Pacific Coast, after the first of the year. Manager Aiston, who has given our theatregoers nothing but the best of plays and the best of companies, is endeavoring to duplicate his previous successes with his newest production, As the Sun Went Down.

The native drama this season has a conspicuous representative in Charles B. Hanford. An American actor in an American play by American authors constitutes his offering for the season. The public has shown a hearty appreciation of the enterprise, which reflects the theatric genius of our own continent.

Tom Lewis, the comedian who will be recalled for his performance of The Unknown in Little Johnny Jones, when it was originally produced at the Columbia Theatre nearly four years ago, is with Geo. M. Cohan and his Royal Family. Lewis has a character in The Yankee Prince not unlike his former excruciatingly funny creation in Little Johnny Jones, and his success this season has been so emphatic that Mr. Cohan has declared his intention to write a play for him.

Robert Mantell has wired Gottlob, Marx & Co. to the effect that he intends to produce eleven plays during his forthcoming engagement at the new Columbia Theatre. The list of productions includes The Lady of Lyons, Louis XI, Macbeth, King Lear, The Merchant of Venice, Hamlet, King Richard III, Romeo and Juliet, Othello, As You Like It, and Richelieu.

David Warfield has started West for a tour of the Pacific Coast cities never before visited by him in the capacity of a star. His tour through the South has been one of the biggest financial and artistic successes.

Jos. M. Gaite's announces the immediate production of a new comedy. The new production, which is called Bright Eyes, is a musicalization of the successful farce Mistakes Will Happen and is by Charles Dickson, Otto Hauerbach and Karl Hoschna, who wrote, respectively, the book, lyrics and music. The new play is in three acts, and Mr. Gaite's has provided it with a very elaborate scenic setting and has introduced a number of elaborate and novel mechanical and electrical effects. The new play is produced with all that elaborateness and close attention to detail that made Three Twins such a stupendous success. The cast will be headed by Cecil Lean and Florence Holbrook and will contain a number of well-known players.

After having enthusiastically endorsed the project at a banquet, the board of directors of the Los Angeles Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association met last week to formulate plans for the winter aviation meet there. There will be ten days of aerial racing, starting January 10th. Fifty thousand dollars has already been raised for prizes. Fifty thousand more will be collected. Dick Ferris, the well-known theatrical manager, started the idea and has the management of the celebration.

Emma Bunting, so it seems, is to have the good fortune of a New York engagement in the very near future. For the next few weeks she will play Lena Rivers through Oregon and California, closing at Los Angeles. She will then take train for New York, where her managers, Barton & Wiswell, have promised her a starring engagement in the metropolis in a new play they are now selecting for her. The selection of the play has narrowed down to two offerings, one by George Broadhurst, the other by Mary Ellen Ryan. Each of them will allow Miss Bunting to be on the stage sixteen-fourths of the time, which is something that all her audiences demand. —Seattle Star.

The Harold Nelson Company has gone into stock in Astoria, Ore., for a few weeks.

Negotiations have been closed with Henry B. Sire, owner of the Bijou Theatre, New York, whereby, beginning on December 1st, the attractions in that playhouse will be booked by the Shuberts for the next year.

The sensational hit of years in New York theatricals is Seven Days, the new comedy by Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood which Wagenhals & Kemper are now presenting at the Astor theatre. The piece came in quietly and without any flourish of trumpets, and made such an instantaneous success that it played to "standing room only" on the second night. Since then it has been the talk of the town, and the theatre has been entirely inadequate to hold the crowds which have been besieging the box office for seats.

Gottlob, Marx & Company's season following will show George M. Cohan, Fritz Scheff, David Warfield, William H. Crane, Marie Cahill, Robert Mantell, Olga Nethersole and Robert Edeson.

William H. Crane has told a St. Louis correspondent that he has made his plans for a farewell tour. But the date for the tour is not yet fixed. "It depends on Mrs. Crane," said the actor. "My wife always travels with me, and when she says she is tired of it and cannot continue, then I shall give my farewell tour." Mr. Crane announces that he will not produce any more plays. "Mr. Ade's Father and The Boys will do me for the rest of my time on the stage," he said, "and it will last for several seasons." For his farewell tour Mr. Crane will give Father and The Boys, The Henrietta, David Harum and The Senator.

As the Sun Went Down, a new play of western life, by Geo. D. Baker, which will be presented by Arthur C. Aiston's company here this season promises to be one of the dramatic treats of the present season. Manager Aiston, who has given our theatre-goers Friends, Tennessee's Pardner, At the Old Cross Roads and other first class attractions, is said to have outdone himself in this, his latest effort. The company is a very strong one and is headed by Estha Williams, who is well known in this city for her excellent work in many different plays. The company in support is a first class one. Scenically the play is mounted elaborately, a special baggage car be-

John Blackwood Returns to Los Angeles from the East and Outlines Plans

According to the plans of John H. Blackwood of the Belasco Theatre, Los Angeles, who has just returned from a trip to New York, the stock company end of that theatrical business is to receive a fresh impetus this season, instead of producing chiefly plays that have enjoyed a vogue elsewhere, the Belasco management proposes to make as many as a dozen new productions, for the greater part in the interest of the big managerial firms of the East. Mr. Blackwood, in discussing the plans of his theatre for the coming winter season to a DRAMATIC REVIEW representative in Los Angeles said: "In New York I found that the unprecedented success of The Dollar Mark at the Belasco Theatre had attracted the attention of the chief producing managers of the country to Los Angeles in general and the Belasco company in particular. Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks, especially, look upon the plan of producing some of their new plays in Los Angeles before they are made known in other localities with no little degree of favor, and by special arrangement with this prominent firm the Belasco company will on December 27 give the first presentation on any stage of a play entitled, Through a Window. This play is by Mrs. Gertrude Nelson Andrews, who is very favorably known locally by reason of her play, Kate Shannon, which was produced at the Auditorium two seasons ago by Florence Stone. Through a Window was to have been produced in New York this fall with Lillian Albertson in the role that will be played here by Thais Magrane. It is a story of San Francisco the night before the day following the fire. Joseph Brooks will come on from New York to witness the production at the Belasco, and at least one of the local performances will engage the services of Miss Mary Bertrand, a niece of Margaret Anglin, who is to play the chief feminine role when Klaw & Erlanger make the Gotham production of Through a Window in March. The Klaw & Erlanger scenic models have been shipped to Los Angeles and the presentation on the Belasco stage will be identical in every way with the one that will be disclosed in New York. Another new play that will receive an early production at the hands of the Belasco company is Waste. It is the work of Porter Emerson Brown, a well known magazine writer who supplied Robert Hilliard with his present starring vehicle, A Fool There Was. The production of Waste is to be made by special arrangement with Frederic Thompson, while The Gringo, a new comedy from the pens of Robert H. Davis, the editor of the Munsey publications, and Henry Kirke, a University of California alumnus, is a comedy that should offer fine fun-making possibilities for Lewis S. Stone and his Belasco associates. Hoorah for the Heir, a sequel to The Heir to the Hoorah, will be produced at the Belasco some time in February under the personal direction of the author, Paul Armstrong. Following this comedy-drama of the West, Mr. Armstrong will also put forward another play called Sierra, in which Mr. Stone and the other Belascoites will have the assistance of N. C. Goodwin, who has for some time cherished an opportunity to appear in Sierra, with a view to using the play for starring purposes if it fulfills ante-production prophecies. The Denver Transfer, a new detective play with an intensely interesting story, will also first see the light of a Western stage at the Belasco. The Denver Transfer is the work of Paul Wilstach. Red Saunders, a play founded upon several of Henry Wallace Phillips' stories and written by Willard Holcomb, will also be included among the Belasco's premier presentations. In addition to the above mentioned pieces the play schedule of the Belasco includes a host of unusually interesting and dramatic products. George Broadhurst is to be represented by at least two new plays, The Garden of Lies and a new comedy entitled The Captain. Many of the most recent Eastern successes will be staged at the Belasco, with an occasional dip into musical comedy, a form of stage entertainment in which the Belasco players have already demonstrated their expertness. Among the earlier musical pieces to be offered will be George M. Cohan's Fifty Miles From Boston and Forty-five Minutes From Broadway." Mr. Blackwood says that within the next ten months he will be at the head of a new theatre in San Francisco, in the conduct of which he will be associated with D. J. Grauman and J. M. Welch. Mr. Grauman is at present erecting a fine new playhouse in the northern metropolis. It will have a seating capacity of almost 2,000 and will be one of the handsomest theatres in the West. Mr. Welch is the general manager of Cohan & Harris. Speaking of the plays in New York at the present time, Mr. Blackwood said "that the condition was unparalleled and that half a hundred failures could not all be accounted for on the very supposable ground that the plays were bad. Grand opera has a large share in the detraction of patronage from the theatres," said he. "People in the East are mad about opera, and they spend money by hundreds or even thousands, not by hundreds of thousands. Henry Russell's new Boston opera has actually killed the theatrical game, for the time being, in the Hub." "Since my return," Mr. Blackwood added, "I have been asked many times about a stock company warfare in this city. There is no such thing to my knowledge, and if there was I think I would know something of it. The people who go to the theatre in this and every other city in this country care mighty little about managerial squabbles. Their chief concern is what we managers are offering to them in return for their money. The Belasco is recognized as one of the most successful stock companies in the country. My sole concern shall be to maintain this reputation and if novelties in the shape of new plays, together with a fair percentage of plays of recognized worth and established value played by a company of the merit of the Belasco organization, can accomplish this object the Belasco will sail along right merrily on the sea of popular esteem."

Oliver Morosco is Home in Los Angeles and Discusses the New Combine

Oliver Morosco returned to Los Angeles on December 2, and to a correspondent of the DRAMATIC REVIEW, went into an extended talk on the new scheme that he and Fred Belasco are now working on. These two managers have at present the Burbank Theatre here, and the Alcazar in San Francisco, for stock purposes, and within six or eight months will establish a chain of stock theatres throughout the West. Mr. Morosco states that this chain will be the greatest system of stock theatres in the world, and the controlling factor in its line west of the Mississippi. They have secured an option on a new theatre in Kansas City, an option on the Shubert Theatre of New Orleans, have made all preliminary arrangements for another theatre in California, and will also operate stock theatres in Portland, Seattle, Denver and Salt Lake City. Such large prospects, of course, give the managers a great deal of pre-eminence in the selection of plays, and upon this point Mr. Morosco said: "We may be said to have tied up absolutely the best plays of the country. Further, we have secured options even upon the future output of producers and authors, and will give Los Angeles, in stock, plays that cannot be had elsewhere outside of regular high-priced road productions. In order to do this we had to pay cash, in many instances, and at large figures." Mr. Belasco and I went down Broadway with $20,000 in actual money. We spent every cent of this in advance royalties—but we secured what we wanted. I can best illustrate this with our purchase of the rights to Brewster's Millions, for use in our theatres. I asked for it, and was met by the instant assurance that it would not be possible to get it for stock at present. I argued—to little avail. Then I put down money—and when I had laid $3000 in gold on the table I got my contracts. Brewster's Millions will be given its first stock production at the Burbank Theatre. Another place where a cash argument was the only thing available was in the purchase of the exclusive rights to St. Elmo. This remarkable play, dramatized from an old book, has become a sort of furore in and about New York. At one time no less than fourteen companies announced versions, mostly pirated. The pirates were all check-mated by the owners, Holcomb and Glaser, and notwithstanding some impressions to the contrary, ours will be the first stock production of the play. The fourth company was sent on the road last week. St. Elmo has just broken all records in Cleveland, O. About February 1 I will give the first production of a new play by Edgar Selwyn, under Mr. Selwyn's direction. He may play in the piece. In fact, this is quite probable. I will also try out a new play by Frances Matthews. The Conspiracy, a play called The Sugar Trust, and several other pieces. We have returned to California with an absolutely exclusive call on the output of Liebler & Co., Sanger & Jordan, Wagenhals Kemper, the American Play Company, Alice Kauser, Darcey and Wolford, Charles Frohman, David Belasco, Henry B. Harris and Henry Miller. We have the first call on the entire output of Eugene Walter, whom many consider the long awaited great American playwright. Among the novelties I have scheduled for production is The Barbarians, a sensational drama of modern Chinese life. Plays I have secured for next season include The Man from Home, The Fourth Estate, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, The Easiest Way, Is Matrimony a Failure? The White Sister and Henri Bernstein's Israel and Samson, never before seen in the West. For more immediate use I have at hand Nurse Marjory, Merely Mary Ann, The Thief, A Message from Mars, The Lion and the Mouse, Pierre of the Plains, The Ringmaster, Sweet Kitty Bellairs, The Darling of the Gods, Just Out of College and other favorites. My new leading woman, Frances Nordstrom, is an up-to-date young genius with tremendous temperament and genuine mahogany hair. The new ingenue, Ethel von Waldron, is a clever little girl who has been an immense favorite in Chicago, and is equally talented. She is really an ingenue-lead, though in the main she will be seen here in strictly ingenue roles. As announced, Mr. Belasco, who is now rehearsing Miss Nordstrom in the role of The Girl of the Golden West, will be here to direct the production of that piece at this theater December 26. I have also attended to the booking of the Majestic, and, commencing Christmas week, I will present the best line of attractions seen at that house so far, The Top o' the World, the first of the pieces I have secured, will be a sample. Plays in New York? Briefly, I would say that The Easiest Way is colossal; Is Matrimony a Failure? the first genuine comedy in years; Seven Days, a fine farce and a great money maker; The Fortune Hunter, the most enjoyable entertainment in New York; Israel, a very strong drama for thinkers, with one tremendous climax; The Fourth Estate, a fine newspaper melodrama, and with its new ending, a probable success; Arsene Lupin, with William Courtenay, a thrilling melodrama glorified by great acting; The Silver Star, a gorgeous production, and Genee, the greatest dancer of the time. The best musical show in New York is The Dollar Princess, with The Chocolate Soldier a close second. David Belasco is working desperately upon his newest production, The Lily, and says that he believes it will be the greatest thing in his career. Nance O'Neill is slated for an important part in this. I visited every prominent stock company in the country, said he, and believe me, there is none to compare in efficiency with Mr. Blackwood's, or our own at the Burbank. I have no idea of fight, he continued. We will go our way and the other house, with its excellent company, will go its way. Mr. Belasco has withdrawn entirely from that organization. I am glad to be at home, glad to be in time to vote for Smith and a progressive town, and for those councilmen who took the lid off the height-of-buildings ordinance, and as well vetoed the movement for Sunday closing of places of amusement.

Bailey and Austin in the Top O' Th' World

Another clever team of vaudeville artists have taken wings and entered the legitimate after two years of hard work to show they can make "good" and are now classed as "stars" and placed in the firmament of the stars' constellation along with the Montgomery and Stones; Elsie Janis, Rock and Fultons and others who a short while back graduated from the same source. Bailey and Austin have stood the "gaff," so to speak, for a couple of seasons and now come into their reward as the stars of the big fantastical musical comedy, The Top o' th' World, which comes to this city Jan. 2. Bailey and Austin have the support of Charles Harris, a clever eccentric comedian, Walter Wills, who played Con Kidder in The Red Mill; Florence Smith, the first of the San Toys; Pearl Revare, formerly with Roger Brothers; Al Grady, the famous animal impersonator, together with Daisy Fuguet, Katherine Hutchinson, Will-Nell Lavender, Monnie Gordon, Percy Walling, Francis Carrier, T. J. McMahon and D. J. Flanagan. The company includes seventy-five people, with a chorus of beautiful girls, who dance and sing with great effect.

Too Much Opera

Oscar Hammerstein said recently, before he left for Philadelphia, that he thought New York was getting too much opera. If I had not opened my season with three novelties, he said,

I don't know what sort of business I might have had. The reason I think that New York is getting too much opera is the result of my experience in Philadelphia. There my houses have been sold out ever since I opened the season, and they tell me that every seat is sold for Sapho tonight. Mr. Hammerstein thinks that the popularity of his Philadelphia house indicates that the supply does not exceed the demand over there. The revival of Le Jongleur de Notre Dame was the chief event this week at the Manhattan Opera House. Massonet's opera was sung by Mary Garden, Maurice Renaud and Charles Glibert in the leading roles. Other members of the cast are Mme. Dufranne, Crabbe, Lucas, Larkin and Huberdeau. Sapho was sung by Mary Garden, Charles Dalmores, Eva D'Alvarez and Hector Dufranne.

Frank Gould Sued by Bessie DeVoe

Shortly before Frank Gould left New York for Europe he was served with papers in a breach of promise suit brought by Bessie de Voe for over $200,000. The papers have been filed in New York, and Delancey Nicoll, who is representing Gould, will fight the case to the bitter end. Bessie de Voe is well known on the stage, having appeared in vaudeville in the team of Young and De Voe and with the Rogers brothers. Gould is said to have met the dancer and to have been pleased with her sincerity of purpose. He thought her superior to her surroundings and hoped to be able to advance her career. It is said that in every way he could Gould tried to lighten her burdens. Their friendship naturally attracted attention in New York, and while Miss de Voe's name was not mentioned in the recent divorce proceedings brought by Mrs. F. Gould, the young actress' name did come up in the perjury case in which Mrs. Ben Teal was sentenced to a term of imprisonment on a charge of manufacturing evidence against Gould.

Nat Goodwin Will Now Stick to Acting

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Nat C. Goodwin has announced his retirement from the financial world in which he has had rather a pyrotechnic career. He has resigned as vice-president of the firm of B. H. Sheffels & Co., dealers in mining stocks, and has left for his home at Ocean Park, Cal. Goodwin says: "I find that the fact of my having been before the public in a professional way for many years has proved an incentive for sensational newspapers to continually undertake to put upon me personally the responsibility of every sensational fluctuation in the mining issue with which I have been identified." It is understood that Mr. Goodwin has disposed of all his mining interests.

Mantell Runs Up Against Child Law

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 25.—Because of a freak child labor law in Louisiana, which is vigorously enforced by a woman factory inspector, Robert Mantell, the Shakespearean actor, has been forced to abandon his presentation of Richard III in New Orleans next Saturday night. Mr. Mantell refuses to substitute hobbledoys for children in the parts of the two young princes in the tower, and thereby insult his audience and make Shakespeare ridiculous. He utterly refuses to cut and mutilate the play, to leave out the greater part of two acts, including some of the strongest scenes and most touching lines in the tragedy. The local public has just awoke to the predicament that will prevent Richard III ever being produced here because of the Louisiana Legislature, in endeavoring to protect the children in their own mills and factories from overwork and danger to life and limb, passed a child labor law which has been so stretched as to prove such a serious drawback to the drama and the opera as to seriously cripple them, if not to threaten their ruin. New Orleans is left in a class to itself, allowing no character under 16 years of age to be presented here.

Alexander, Handcuff King, in the Toils for Raw Work

Monday evening of last week, James O'Kelly, a towboat man of Coos Bay, secured the arrest of "Doctor" Astro, alias Alexander, a clairvoyant and handcuff king, formerly of St. Paul, and Stella Tynan, a one-time vaudeville performer, and accused them to the police of having conspired to foist Miss Tynan on his sympathies as his long lost stepdaughter and heiress to $5,000, which O'Kelly's wife left to the daughter when she should be found. If O'Kelly's story is true, and the police do not doubt it, "Doctor" Astro, Miss Tynan and a third person, a man, worked on O'Kelly as thrilling a deception as was ever perpetrated in the melodramatic atmosphere of San Francisco. O'Kelly is a wealthy resident of Coos Bay. He is a man about 50 years of age. Five years ago he married a widow. Before her death Mrs. O'Kelly told her husband that she had a daughter by a former husband to whom she wished to will $5,000. When she and her first husband had parted the father took the little girl and Mrs. O'Kelly has not seen her for years. O'Kelly had never seen the girl. O'Kelly promised his dying wife that he would institute a search for the girl. Shortly after his wife died he came to San Francisco and began his quest. One day he found "Doctor" Astro's clairvoyancy parlor at 1035 Market street. He went in. The "doctor" declared that he could help O'Kelly find the girl, but that frequent seances would be necessary. The seances were held in a hot, close room and O'Kelly, used to fresh air, would take off his coat during the materializations. When his coat was off, in the opinion of Detectives Riordan, Wren and Bud, who were engaged on the case, Astro and his assistants would go through their victim's clothes and from the letters and papers there find out all about O'Kelly. They got hold of O'Kelly's watch one day and rushed to a nearby gallery and took a photographic copy of a picture of O'Kelly's wife, which the man carried in the cover of his timepiece. Then the plot was ready to break. They told O'Kelly that he would find his stepdaughter at the Winchester Hotel on Third street. O'Kelly went there and Miss Stella Tynan met him with the sobbing cry of "Father." O'Kelly wasn't too easy. He demanded some proof of the girl's relationship to his wife. She wept gently and said that she had nothing to show in proof but the photograph of her dear mother. She produced the copy of the watch picture. "Here is mother's picture," she sobbed. O'Kelly was convinced. He gave the girl $1,200 on account, all his wife's jewelry, diamonds, watches and clothes. He planned for her to go to Coos Bay with him. Then the girl disappeared. She told the police she had been mistreated by Astro and decided to leave him and not divide up the loot. She started for Chicago, but Astro and his assistant took her off the train and hurried her back to the city. Monday evening O'Kelly, made skeptical by the girl's disappearance, saw Miss Tynan, Astro and the second man on the street together. He informed the police of the alleged conspiracy and the group were followed. Astro and the girl were arrested and placed in detainee. They were later charged with grand larceny by trick and device. The police recovered $480 and most of Mrs. O'Kelly's jewelry and clothing.

Al. Luttringer III

Chas. Farrell, Editor of DRAMATIC REVIEW, San Francisco, Cal.

Just a line to let you know of the serious illness of Al Luttringer, who was taken down very suddenly with a severe case of typhoid fever. His father and sister were wired for from San Francisco to come to Marion, O., where he was confined in the hospital. On their arrival they found his condition very serious, and were given little hope by his doctor and nurse. He has been in the hospital seven weeks, but last Monday was removed in the ambulance to his parents' temporary home, and he is now doing very nicely, with the exception of a slight set back, due to congestion of the kidney caused from cold. On Nov. 16, his birthday, he was presented with beautiful flowers by the Elks lodge of Marion, the White Rats of America, of which there were a number engaged at one of the local theatres. The T. M. A.'s of Marion, also presented flowers and fruit. His family have nothing but praise for his doctor, who happens to be the local physician for the T. M. A.'s of Marion. They also wish to thank his lodge, No. 26, T. M. A. of Oakland, for their kind and prompt brotherly attention shown to him. While it will be some time before he is able to be up and about, I feel confident, with the skillful attention given him by Dr. E. Brady, he will be healthier than ever. Hoping that his many friends in San Francisco will hear of his illness, also learn that his address for some time to come will be care of Orpheum Theatre, Marion, Ohio, I beg to remain, Yours sincerely, G. TURNER.

HENRY McREA, now starring in The Spoilers, likes San Francisco and is considering a stock proposition in this city.

MRS. LOUIS HARRISON, wife of the playwright and actor, died suddenly of heart disease Nov. 26, in her apartments at the Hotel Marlborough, New York. Mrs. Harrison before her marriage was an actress, playing under the name of Anna Schulz, and was a popular favorite two decades ago on the Pacific Coast and in the South.

JOSEPHINE COHAN, George Cohan's sister, who created the part of Evelyn Fielding in The Yankee Prince, and played it until recently, is in Los Angeles, having been forced by illness to retire from her part in The Yankee Prince. Miss Cohan—who in private life is Mrs. Niblo—has been very ill. She has had severe heart trouble, and she may never dance again. Her retirement will be a distinct loss to the stage, as she is unquestionably the best soubrette on the stage, and a dancer par excellence.

Oliver Morosco Has Picked a Los Angeles Winner in St. Elmo

Los Angeles, Dec. 9—The Burbank company and its production of The Play of the Year, is attracting a large amount of attention this week and incidentally also attracting large audiences too. The only authorized version of St. Elmo is being used by Mr. Morosco's company and it is the first time the play has been produced in the West. Walter Hoff Seeley is in town in the interests of William Morris. He announces that Harry Lauder will play here early in January. If the time is open the Temple Auditorium will be used, if not either the Shrine or the Simpson Auditorium will be chosen. George Broadhurst is completing his new farce, The Captain, which will be produced at the Belasco Theatre this winter. Yesterday, while on their way home in Mr. Stone's automobile, Mr. Stone and Mr. Vivian met with an accident. Their machine collided with a heavy meat truck while they were trying to get out of the way of an approaching street car. Both men were bruised some but made their appearance last night in the cast of Monte Cristo. Mrs. Gertrude Nelson Andrews arrived in town yesterday. Mlle. Fritz Scheff will celebrate her wooden wedding Monday night at the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco. Next week the Belasco company will present Cosmo Hamilton's play of capital and labor, The Master Key. This is by special arrangement with William Brady. Harry Earl and his wife are now associated with the Unique. Mr. Earl will be remembered as stage manager at the Grand last summer and he has been engaged in the same capacity by the management of the Unique. Manager Clarence Drown is expected to return home soon from his trip to Honolulu. Wallace Munro is in town. For several years he has been in charge of Louis James' tours. He is now manager for Olga Nethersole, and will present his new star here in a few weeks. Harry Alexander has rejoined Mr. Berry at New Orleans. Mr. Alexander will act as advance agent for the Lambardi Opera Company during its American tour. AUDITORIUM—The Bachelor, one of the last of Clyde Fitch's plays, is being given a fine production at the Auditorium this week. The comedy is in three acts and requires the small cast of seven people. It is one of these light entertaining stories with plenty of good, clean comedy and a pretty story. All of the characters are likeable and are well portrayed. The story is of a confirmed bachelor and his stenographer. Without realizing what has happened he falls in love with the girl and she with him. They meet with some difficulties but everything is adjusted happily for all concerned in the last act, and wedding bells make a fitting ending for the play. Charles Cherry plays the title role consistently and intelligently. Ruth Maycliff, who is as pretty as a picture, plays the stenographer; she is a very winning and attractive Jenny. She is a charming young comedienne. The balance of the parts are well handled by F. Percival Stevens, Ralph Morgan, Lillian Paige and Alice Riker. BELASCO—Lewis S. Stone and the Belasco company are this week giving a big production of Monte Cristo, the Dumas romance. Mr. Stone is Edmund Dantes, the romantic hero who is cast into prison for no reason of which he knows. His escape in a well nigh miraculous way, and his return to avenge his wrongs are both well known incidents of the play and they are as interesting and wonderful as ever. The master hand of Scene Artist Brunton is in evidence and the whole production does credit to all connected with it. Frank Camp does excellent work in the role of Nortier. Miss Magrane plays the leading feminine role of Mercedes. Howard Scott is cast as Villefort and William Yerance as Danglars. The other characters, in the hands of Richard Vivian, Charles Ruggles, Adele Farrington and Fay Bainter, are well taken care of. BURBANK—The much talked of St. Elmo is being given a splendid production at the hands of Mr. Morosco's able company of players. St. Elmo is the dramatization of a very old novel; it has made a tremendous success in the East and the present offering is the first Western production of the play. The scene of the play is laid in the South before the war. The first act discloses a duel between St. Elmo Murray and Murray Hammond. Hammond is killed. A little girl, Edna Earl, is witness to this duel. Her grandfather, the village blacksmith, also dies in the first act and the little girl is left alone. St. Elmo goes out into the world and the next we see of him is after several years have elapsed and the little girl is no longer little but a charming young woman. St. Elmo has become an avowed woman hater, but at last love finds the way to the man's heart. Mr. Beasley is convincing and does some really fine acting as St. Elmo Murray. Miss Hall seems very real as the little girl, and does clever work in the later and stronger scenes of the play. David Landau does a good bit in the character of the blacksmith, and Harry Mestayer has the short part of Murray Hammond. Willis Marks has a character role. Miss Royce and Miss Taylor both do well in their respective parts. The Burbank presentation of the play is a very good one. MAJESTIC—The Majestic is dark this week. Next Sunday the house will again be open for the production of The Spoilers. The engagement is for one week. MASON—Once again Mlle. Fritz Scheff is with us. Her vehicle for the present engagement is The Prima Donna, by Victor Herbert and Henry Blossom. There is some beautiful music in the piece but nothing that demands a great deal of the singers. Miss Scheff and Vernon Davidson do have some numbers that are difficult and they show of what the two artists are capable. William Harcourt as Capt. Bordenave does some fine acting. He belongs in a place where he has opportunity for real acting. The comedy of the piece is furnished by John Hazard as the bandmaster, and Martin Haydon as a young officer. The costumes are appropriate, the stage settings adequate and the chorus can sing. Mlle. Fritz Scheff is just herself, attractive, vivacious and a charming prima donna; her presence dominates the stage at all times. Last week, Thursday, The Talk of New York opened at the Mason. The piece, by George Cohan, is not the success that many of his have been, however it is a vehicle that displays the talents of the star, Victor Moore. Mr. Moore's Kid Burns is surely entertaining and he was supported by a large company that in the main did good work. Had this piece not followed so close on the heels of The Yankee Prince it would undoubtedly have made a bigger hit. As it was they did a good business here. GRAND—After numerous requests, Mr. Hartman at last yields to the demand and we see his company in The Love Tales of Hoffman this week. As Hoffman, Mr. Welch has the opportunity to display his fine tenor voice to better advantage than in any other part he has been called upon to sing. To him falls the bulk of the work of the performance but we are never tired of listening to him. He is well assisted by Josephine Islieb. Her voice has not the strength nor power adjusted happily for all concerned.

of Miss Neilson's, who sang in the former production. However Miss Islieb does well and works hard and she deserves commendation. Joseph Fogarty is seen as Dr. Miracle. Walter de Leon is cast as a servant and Elvia Rand is Niclausse. The costumes are most effective and the scenery and lighting effect well managed. The production is, in many ways, better than the former one. ORPHEUM—Our Boys in Blue hold the fort this week, with a rousing act, wherein we are shown drills in infantry, guard mount, sentry duty, bayonet and artillery practice, finished with a very realistic battle scene. The men are experts in their different movements, all made without command, and the act is as inspiring as it is instructive. Lulu McConnell, with her convulsing grimaces and faint shadow of a voice, presents a Stormy Hour, ably assisted by Grant Simpson. The tale of a family difference, aroused by a jealous misunderstanding, is made very funny by the fascinating comedy manner of Miss McConnell, and her inimitable personality. By far the best strong man act that has ever visited the Orpheum is that of Bobby Pandor and his brother, whose stunts are vastly different from the general run. These two perfect specimens of humanity go through their wonderful feats of strength with ease, abandon and grace, that make their act one of enjoyment. The Tempest and Sunshine Trio, with more sunshine than tempest, present an act consisting of numerous sprightly songs with as many changes of costume, all done in a smooth and unaffected manner. The holdovers are Minnie Seligman and Williams Bramwell, in the nerve racking Drums of Doom, The Bounding Gordons, The Bootblack Quartette and Lockwood and Bryson, in honor of whom the Elks filled Monday night's house. LOS ANGELES—Good vaudeville is being demonstrated at this house this week, for there is The Ventriloquist and his Doll, with Mr. Colby and Miss May to show us how it is done; also Lavelle and Grant in a splendid feat of hand balancing, showing well developed muscles used to good advantage. Frobel and Ruge have a novel aerial act, brightened with bits of comedy. Frank Killeon and Dick M. contribute much to the fun and Harry and Messimer & Co. present Mister Stranger, a sketch of fantastic nature and funny throughout. FISCHER'S—The Maid of Dundee is the offering at Fischer's this week and is a musical comedy from the facile pen of Will Carleton. Mr. Kelly as the detective does his usual good work. Chas. Figg plays the captain of the baseball nine, in love with the soubrette. Annie Bauman has the role of The Maid of Dundee, Nan Halpern, the soubrette. Frank Vack makes his first appearance as Fritz Flugel, a German bookmaker. Miss Massey as the cross and crabbed aunt has one of her best character parts. Among the song hits are Cubanola, In Politics and Carrie-Marry-Harry. The chorus do good work. OLYMPIC—The Alphin-Fargo Musical Comedy Company are presenting Poppyland, a very clever play revolving around a fiend of the dope variety. Dave Morris, as the gentleman addicted to the product of the poppy, gives a splendid portrayal. Laurel Atkins Blair has the leading role and makes good her reputation for comedy. Walter Spenser also makes his initial appearance, together with Frank Morton. The balance of the cast, including Maude Rockwell, Blossom Seeley, Jules Mendel, Leonard Brisbane, with an excellent chorus, go to make up a strong company and provide plenty of excellent entertainment. UNIQUE—Commencing with the Monday matinee, a change of policy goes into effect in this house, when Harry Earl, Grace Rauworth and company open with a play called A Wife's Peril. This was produced at the Grand Opera House some time ago, and is now repeating its success of that time. It is a comedy drama of intense interest and is well produced by this capable company. In addition to the above company are two vaudeville acts—The Armands, in a novelty musical act, and The Goldmans in a skit devoted to singing and character changes.

FLORENCE EMERY.

Clever People in the Gay Musician

THE GAY MUSICIAN is the prettiest comedy that San Francisco has seen for many a day. Denver should be very proud when she has been the home of such a product as Texas Guinan, the star of the company. Miss Guinan wins you immediately with her sweet smile and naturalness, and when the curtain falls on the last act, she has made such an impression you're not quite ready to go home. Miss Guinan has the secret of a sure success—she is just herself, and that is a very fascinating self. She doesn't you of anyone, nor does she work like anyone else; she's just Texas Guinan, and before very long artists will be giving imitations of Texas. She can both act and sing.

LOTTIE KENDLE, an old favorite here, who starred in her own show, is a stunning brunnette with a very expressive face and pretty figure, and four stunning gowns to show it off. Miss Kendle has a rich contralto voice and sings with a great deal of feeling. She also is very natural in her acting and a strong and attractive figure in the success of The Gay Musician.

Correspondence

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Paul Bourget's Divorce, last Monday afternoon at the Lyric Theatre, is a play that leaves a host of impressions. Divorce is one long series of debates, and as the topics of discussion are the outcome chiefly of a local point of view that has little direct relation to conditions outside of France, the arguments are at times unnecessarily tedious. It is easy enough to understand a Paris audience being interested, possibly excited, over the arguments in Divorce, but the particular phases of the question which form the basis of M. Bourget's play do not touch us so closely. Moreover, our blood runs somewhat more coldly. M. Bourget is interested in proving that the marriage of a divorcee without the church's sanction is in effect the same as a marriage in "free love"—that is to say, in this particular case the evils attendant upon a union contracted under the "law of conscience" are practically repeated in the case of a divorced woman who has married under a civil ceremony while her first husband still lives. The resultant evils are precipitated when Lucien, son of Gabrielle Darras by her first husband, falls desperately in love with a trained nurse, Berthe Planat, who is discovered to have had a child as a consequence of a union contracted under the "law of conscience" arrangement, which in this particular case has made it possible for the man to decamp as soon as he grew tired of the woman. As M. Darras is a free thinker, and has always been opposed to the Church, matters are further complicated now that his little daughter is about to be confirmed, the wife coincidentally developing a religious fervor supposedly dead since her second marriage. The upshot of the matter is that the son goes to live with the nurse, and the husband and wife appear to be on the breaking point, when—and this a somewhat unconvincing concession to popular prejudice—they agree to exercise forbearance toward one another. The cast included May Shaw, Maude Fealey, Eben Plympton and John Glendinning. * * * An entirely new circus bill, one of the most expensive ever seen outside of a three-ring circus, was put on at the Hippodrome last week. It included a most thrilling dive from the dome of the great playhouse to an inclined platform erected on the stage, by Desperado, who is billed as the Daredevil Rider, and who, it may be said, justified his claim to the title. Desperado's act is unlike anything ever attempted by any of the various other death-defying lunatics, who keep people's hearts in their throats. The platform on which he alights is arranged so as to break his fall and carry him in a kind of semi loop-the-loop to the center of the stage where he lands on his feet. A miscalculation of a few inches in his descent would doubtless result in death quick and certain. Among the newcomers on the bill, also, are the Lorch family of acrobats, ten in number, who perform most wonderful balancing feats; Ray Thompson, equestrienne, who, with a man partner, turned somersaults and performed other marvelous acrobatics on horseback; the Five Peres, ladder equilibrists, who climber to the tops of ladders which they balance like stilts, and then walked about the stage on them while going through various contortions; Ella Bradna and Frederick Derrick, bareback riders, no less interesting than Miss Thompson; Thaleno's Novelty Circus, consisting of a number of beautiful dogs who ride on the backs of ponies; the Ploetz Larellas, acrobats, and the Manello Marnitz Troupe of balancing wonders. Altogether it is an extraordinary addition to what is perhaps the most magnificent spectacular show in the world. The audience applauded the new acts to the echo. The circus, however, is merely a prelude to the marvelous spectacles that have been interesting great crowds of visitors to New York since the opening of the theatrical season * * * In the performance of Sapho last week at the Manhattan, Mary Garden gave a much more convincing performance of Fanny than she did when the opera was previously produced, and it is chiefly the dramatic work of Miss Garden that counts in Sapho. The music of the entire opera is a succession of dissonances, with only a rare lucid phrase, which sort of composition naturally hides rather than displays any vocal ability. Dalmores repeated his splendid impersonation of Jean, and Dufranne, Huberdeau and Mlle. Soyer were applauded for some capital work. * * * Lohengrin was sung last week for the second time this season at the Metropolitan Opera House, and again gave satisfaction to a large and sympathetic house. Gadski, in admirable voice, was the Elsa, a role in every way adapted to her voice and style. Carl Joern repeated his interesting impersonation of Lohengrin, though indisposed, and Louise Homer once more sang the part of Ortrud. Otto Goritz, an artist who has not been praised enough here, made an excellent Telramund, while Allan Hinckley was the Heinrich. The performance was in every way one which did credit to the Metropolitan. The most interesting feature of it was perhaps the work done by the chorus. Alfred Hertz conducted with his accustomed earnestness. ROB ROY.

CARSON CITY, NEVADA.—Lake Theatre, Hayes & Murray, proprietors, December 4 the management devoted half of the receipts to the Leisure Hour Club for its building fund. The house was packed to the doors. The regular line of films was displayed, interspersed with interesting features under the direction of E. D. Vanderlieth of the Leisure Hour. The mandolin club, composed of Mrs. J. E. Muller, Mrs. G. T. Mills, Mrs. H. R. Mighels, Mrs. F. E. Regan, and Miss Harvey Cameron, rendered two selections; Messrs. Ruedy and Gosemerker sang a German song, and the farce, Improving a Husband, was effectively given by Miss Ethel Davis (daughter of the well-known Sam Davis and sister of Philip Ver-rill Mighels) and Jack Richards, a rising young barrister, recently of San Francisco. A. ST. PAUL, Minn.—Week of 28th contained a lot of good things for the theatre goers of the twin cities, notably Blanche Bates at the Metropolitan in The Fighting Hope. This is the play that ran one year at the Belasco-Stuyvesant Theatre, New York. Little Nemo, with Joe Cawthorn, Harry Kelly, Harry Clay Blaney,

LONG BEACH, Dec. 6—Bentley Grand (L. H. Bentley, owner; Perry Girton, manager). Last week the Girton Stock Company presented The Holy City, the greatest production ever seen at this theatre. The play was well received by a large and enthusiastic audience each night. Iva Shepard made a beautiful stage picture, clad first in a scarlet robe, which changed to drapery of pure white instantaneously, at the finals in the first act. Her wicked abandon in this act was passionate and realistic. Her work throughout was finished. Albert MacQuarrie was extremely effective as Judas. James Guy Usher has returned to the company from the Belasco Theatre in Los Angeles, and was especially good in a double role. Corbett Morris was excellent as Lazarus. James Dillon, a new member of the company, gave a good account of himself as Peter. Gertrude Claire also deserves praise. The balance of the company were exceedingly well cast. The stage settings were beautiful. This week the company is seen in a comedy. This is the last week of this popular company and we regret to see them leave. They open at the Unique Theatre in San Bernardino. Long Beach Theatre (Leonard & Osborn, managers). Harry Hollingsworth and company opened here last week in College Chums to good business. This is their last week. The moving picture shows are all doing a good business. Two new ones will open soon. Judge Bentley was here from Minneapolis during the past week.

HANFORD, Dec. 2.—As repertoire companies have been shut out of Hanford for several years, Walter Newman, of the Newman-Foltz company, got busy with the Daniel of the La Grande Theatre and persuaded that gentleman to enlarge his stage, build dressing-rooms, put in an inclined floor and opera chairs. Consequently the Newman-Foltz Company opened a week's engagement last Sunday night to a capacity house and has been filling it every night since. By seven o'clock Sunday evening the street in front of the La Grande was blockaded with people, and fifteen minutes before the curtain rose the house was packed to suffocation. The American was the play and seemed to hit the proper chord with the Hanford audience. The Newman-Foltz Company are making good everywhere, and considering the times, their big business is remarkable. It shows that the people want good performances at popular prices.

CHICO, Dec. 8.—King Dodo comes to the Majestic. Snap, the comedy presented by local talent Thanksgiving night for the benefit of the Chamber of Commerce was repeated on the evening of December 7 at the Majestic for the same cause. Unfortunately, adverse weather and the fact that Chico is a "one-night" town caused the efforts of those who so generously contributed their services, to be lightly rewarded, for the audience was small and there was little satisfaction in the endeavor to arouse enthusiasm.

MARYSVILLE, Dec. 6.—On Wednesday evening, December 1, The Man of the Hour played to a fair house, and while not up to expectations, the actors were very capable, especially those playing Phelan and Horgan. The theatre-goers are now looking forward to King Dodo, December 11.

Correspondence

OAKLAND, Dec. 8.—After an absence of about a year, The Man of the Hour was again presented at The Macdonough, December 7, and received a right royal welcome. The house was filled and the play greatly enjoyed. The Man of the Hour will continue until the 10th and then George M. Cohan in The Yankee Prince. Facing the Music opened to a big house at The Liberty, Monday evening and has played to good houses ever since. The play had never been presented here before and proved to be one of the best new shows seen here for some time. George Friend gave a droll impersonation of the Rev. John Smith and the other Mr. Smith found a worthy keeper in the hands of Sidney Ayres. Walter Whipple's Colonel Smith was good, and the Dick Desmond of Harrison Ford was particularly well rendered. As a detective, Henry Shumer had Sherlock Holmes beaten to a frazzle. As the two wives, Edith Lyle and Bessie Sankey showed to advantage, and Mina Gleason as the housekeeper was more than pleasing. During the performance a nice little specialty in the singing and dancing line was executed by Claribel Becker. The Judge and the Jury will be the next attraction. At the Orpheum, Ben Welch is a scream and the audience never seem to get enough of his Hebrew and Italian spiel. Edwin Stevens is again scoring heavily in a new sketch, Guardy. Other numbers include John B. Hymer, Vittoria & Giorgetta, Katchen Loissett, De Haven Sextette, Howard's Musical Shetlands, and Milt Wood. The attendance has been fully up to The Orpheum standard and the quality of the performance is as good as ever. The motion pictures of the final game in the Detroit-Pittsburg championship series is being featured at The Bell and is proving of unusual interest. It is one of the best pictures ever seen here. Besides this some clever stunts are presented by Godlewsky Troupe, John Bergamasco, Bradlee Martin & Co., Billy Clarke, and the Malvern Troupe. George Hamlin, the tenor, gave a concert at The Liberty on the 8th, to an enthusiastic audience of music lovers. Owing to a heavy downpour the attendance was slight, but those who braved the storm were well repaid, as Mr. Hamlin proved a rare treat. Fritz Kreisler appears on the 17th. The Orpheus Club will give their annual concert at The Liberty on the 14th. Maribel Seymour has accepted a temporary engagement with Bishop's players and will appear in next week's cast. The County Fair and Admiral Crichton are in preparation by Bishop's players. LOUIS SCHEELINE.

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 29.—Hellig—(Calvin Hellig, mgr.; William Pangle, res. mgr.)—The Thanksgiving offering at this theatre was Wright Lorimer in The Shepherd King. Business was good throughout the engagement. The play is one built along the lines of Ben Hur, and the management have given it a production that is not far behind that play from a scenic standpoint. Mr. Lorimer proved to be an artist of more than average ability, and the supporting company was sufficiently adequate.

Last night at this house, John Cort offered his revival of King Dodo. Eleanor Kent and Zoe Barnett were the very bright spots of the company, and they scored the largest sized hits, William Friend was not equal to the demands made upon him in the title role. The chorus is fairly well drilled. Coming—Fritz Kresler in concerts. PORTLAND—(Russell & Drew, mgrs.)—There was no attraction at this house last night, the opening for the next booking being tonight, when Dallas Welford offers Mr. Hopkinson. BAKER—(George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—The Johnson-Ketchel pictures are being offered at this house for three nights. The Spanish War Veterans give their annual minstrel show at this theatre 1st and 2nd. The next regular booking is Forty-five Minutes from Broadway, which opens Dec. 4. ORPHEUM—(John F. Cordray, mgr.)—With all kinds of novelty the past week's bill at this theatre was indeed an interesting one. Florence Bindley in her monologue act, a Quiet Afternoon at Home, was really a tip-top headliner—in fact, just as good an act as one could wish for, comprising as it did, singing, dancing and acting, and all done with artistic action. John Birch, billed as the man with the hats, has an act out of the ordinary, and pleased the audience, as did The Four Floods in their burlesque acrobatic work. This week's bill includes—Donald Bowles & Co., The Klein Family, Perry & White, Fox & Millership Sisters, Williams & Tucker, Caicedo, and Carl Nobel. Lyric—(Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—The Sign of the Four is offered at the Lyric this week for the bill. It went well at the opening yesterday. Will D. Howard plays the leading role this week, and gave a good performance of the sleuth of fiction. Priscilla Knowles had a small role, but got all possible out of it. Sidney Payne, Robert Athon and Effie Johnson had the other parts of any importance and gave finished portrayals thereof. Next week—Tempest and Sunshine. Grand—(Frank Coffinberry, mgr.)—The acts announced for the ensuing week are: Carlotta, Sydney Deane & Co., Damm Brothers, Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien, George H. Wood, Nelly Burt and Fred Bauer. Pantages—(John Johnson, mgr.)—This week's bill includes: Herbert's Cats and Dogs, Deltorelli & Glissando, Keene & Adams, Coyne & Tinion, Redway & Lawrence, James R. Water and Leo White. A. W. W.

San Diego, Dec. 9.—GARRICK—(J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Dec. 5-6 The Three Twins to big houses and proved to be one of the best musical shows of the season. Persse & Mason in the Singing Bandits did only fair business on account of rain. They have a very fair singing show. The Three Twins will play a return engagement here Christmas. PICKWICK—(Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—The Charles King Stock Company is putting on The Regeneration this week to very fair business. Mr. King, as the Bowery Tough, gives an excellent interpretation. Miss Rambau gives excellent support as does the balance of the company. QUEEN—(John Donnellan, mgr.)—Manager Donnellan is putting on one of the best shows in many a week at the Queen this week. The bill is headed by Rossiter's Bunch of Kids, who have an excellent act that is replete with catchy songs. Edith Haney, the pocket edition comedian,

Bertha Darrel

The very beautiful picture on our front page this week is that of one of our best singing soubrettes, who for the past two years has made her home in San Francisco, looking after her business interests. Miss Darrel, winsome of manner, and beautiful of face and figure, came into notice when she originated the contralto lead in When Johnny Comes March Home. Other triumphs followed and she gained a reputation for fine work and her voice was considered to be of exceptional quality. Miss Darrel has just concluded to make her reappearance in a Broadway musical success, and has planned to open the season in the spring. The exact date will be announced later in THE DRAMATIC REVIEW. There is no doubt but that a big success awaits the new venture.

Morris Theatre, Salt Lake

WALTER HOFF SEELEY returned to his San Francisco office last Wednesday after a quick and effective trip to Salt Lake and Los Angeles. In Salt Lake, Mr. Seeley secured the co-operation of Samuel Newhouse, the Salt Lake mining millionaire, and a contract was signed whereby Mr. Newhouse pledged himself to start at once the erection of a magnificent theatre in the finest location in Salt Lake City, at the corner of State street and Exchange place. Architect Cobb, of Chicago, is now drawing plans and the theatre will be finished by Sept. 1, 1910. In Los Angeles Mr. Seeley arranged with Wm. Garland, the real estate operator for a site for the Morris Music Hall. While away, Mr. Seeley also perfected plans for the appearance of Harry Lauder and a vaudeville company, to play the Auditorium in Denver, opening Jan. 3, then the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake (the first time the place has been given to a theatrical company), the Auditorium in Los Angeles, Dreamland Rink in this city and a trip covering the main cities of the Northwest. While in Salt Lake City Mr. Seeley took in a performance of The Squawman, as played by the Willard Mack company, and pronounced it very fine. Mr. Mack has returned to the cast and is immensely popular in the Mormon city. His wife, Maud Leona, will replace Blanche Douglas in the leads next week.

Correspondence

SPOKANE, Wash., Dec. 6.—The Auditorium Theatre was dark last week and until 10-11, when The Alaskan will be seen here; 12-14, The Third Degree. At the Spokane, last week, Honeymoon Trail, with Bert Baker and a good supporting company, closed a successful week's business. George Primrose Minstrels opened to a packed house, 6. Next week, In Dreamland. Last week's bill at the Orpheum, headed by Alice Lloyd, broke all records at the house. Thursday night there was a special program after the evening performance for the Shriners, who filled the house. Friday evening the Elks were there in a body, the house being decorated in their colors. Miss Lloyd was presented with a large bouquet of flowers, while the Elks' quartet sang Auld Lang Syne. This week's bill is up to the standard, and was approved by two large houses at the opening performance. Frank Tinney heads the bill and is a very clever comedian. Franklyn Underwood-Frances Slosson, in a sketch, Dobb's Dilemma. Basque Grand Opera Quartet sing well. Donovan-Arnold, in a singing and talking act, is well handled. Belle Davis and her Crackerjacks in Southern pastimes, take a prominent place on the bill. Lauettos' Japanese jugglers; Fox-Foxies' circus of trained dogs, cats, and motion pictures. At the Washington are seen The Romany Opera Company in La Fiesta di Agosta, consisting of seven grand opera soloists; the Four Baltus, Olympian acrobats; J. C. Tremayne Co., presenting one-act farce-comedy, The Girl of the Times; Frank Mackley, wizard of the banjo; Gardner-Golden, blackface comedians; Marie Fitzgibbons Chaleuse, eccentric, and motion pictures. The usual good bill at Pantages. Le Van Trio, novel sensational comedy gymnasts. The next feature act is May Tully Co.'s playlet, Stop, Look, Listen; the Novelty Dancing Four; Nancy Withrow, pianologue; Del-a-Phone, imitations; Valdare-Varno, comedy cyclists; Wm. D. Gilson, song illustrator, and motion pictures conclude the bill. The Arcade moving picture house, recently opened, is managed by Sol Levy, and they are showing the latest pictures, and crowded houses are the rule. SMYTH.

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 6.—Alhambra Theatre—After being dark for several weeks the Alhambra opened up last night to a large audience. An English play, with British players, was the offering, and set a new pace for laughter. Mr. Hopkinson is the funniest farce, and Dallas Welford the funniest comedian, that has been seen in Seattle for a long time. Mr. Welford has an excellent support, and although the other characterizations are clever and amusing, "Hoppy" is the whole show. Moore, Theatre—Admirers of Ezra Kendall will turn out in full force this week to see him at the Moore in The Vinegar Buyer, although this is not the first time he has been seen here in the same comedy. A number of new jokes have been introduced and Mr. Kendall's rendition of the part is as delightful as ever. Grand Theatre—Billy Clifford and his company are at the Grand in The Girl at the Helm, which will close its engagement next Wednesday night. It is a jolly piece and a good company, with just sufficient plot to make things go. There are a number of songs which will catch the popular favor. Seattle Theatre—The Queen of the Highway, Charles A. Taylor's exciting play, is being offered by the Seattle Stock Company and drew two big crushes yesterday. Lois Theatre—The Lois Company are presenting Zira, which is the first production in stock of this fascinating play based on the famous story of The New Magdalen, by Wilkie Collins. The old play has been modernized and will always be a great attraction. Orpheum—The new bill commencing this afternoon will consist of Alice Lloyd, The McNaughtons, Brothers Perman, Cross & Josephine, La Tosca, Two Arkansas, and Joe Garza. Majestic—The top-liner is The Operator. Pantages—Arthur Houston in his skit, Roosevelt in Africa, while built for fun, is just as strenuous as the popular ex-president, and is both artistic and meritorious. Houston is a world traveler, and in his journeys has picked up many valuable trophies of the hunt and exploration. He uses these trophies to decorate his act, and it will be a surprise to all who are accustomed to the ordinary line of acts. E. MORGENSTERN.

Van Ness Theatre

George M. Cohan and his all star cast in The Yankee Prince, are still pleasing large audiences at the Van Ness, but not as large as was confidently expected, especially when it is remembered that George M. Cohan was one of the best friends San Francisco had at the time of the big fire. Mr. Cohan gave the proceeds of each and every show from 10 o'clock the first day for weeks afterwards sold papers, sang songs and one of his shows to the sufferers, and besides this he was one of the largest individual money contributors. Taking all this in consideration, one would imagine he would play to S. R. O. It is certainly not the fault of the show or anything connected with it, for it is conceded that The Yankee Prince Company and performance is in a class by itself. George M. Cohan has surrounded himself with a cast of artists, and the shining luminary is young Mr. Cohan himself. The entire show is an artistic success and will close its engagement here Sunday night, and all who have delayed in going, should not miss the opportunity. It is worth several visits.

Garrick Theatre

The Shepherd King is still being most artistically portrayed by Wright Lorimer, who has a splendid supporting company. The show is scheduled to run another week. Following two weeks of darkness comes The Top o' th' World, with Bailey & Austin featured.

Princess Theatre

This is the last week of Kolb & Dill in The Rich Mr. Hoggeneimer. The new show will be the piece once used by Rogers Bros. and called In Africa.

Alcazar Theatre

A Message from Mars is being given a very creditable performance this week. In fact, the personnel of the company is of such a superior calibre that the piece gets an added value. For, in fact, at the best, A Message from Mars is only a preachment, with some dubious comedy thrown in. The "business" of the play is worked up admirably and is very effective. The rattling of windows, the rocking of chairs, the jumping of tables and the threatened falling of walls is so natural as to border closely on the mysterious, unless you are "in" on the scheme behind the footlights. John Ince plays the part of Horace Parker, the selfish man, and to his credit it is to be said that he sinks his own pleasant personality into the repellant characteristics of the part with great success. Louis Bennison is a compelling figure as the messenger from Mars. His fine presence and elocution fit the part admirably. Charles Dow Clark, steady and reliable always, imparts decided quality to his impersonation of the old broken-down inventor, who has sunk to the level of the gutter. Howard Hickman, Wm. Garwood, Herbert Farjeon, Walter Belasco and Geo. Baldwin filled out the rest of what was left of the male parts most satisfactorily. Adele Belgarde as Aunt Martha did a fine bit of character portrayal, and Evelyn Vaughan could only be sweet and patient in the part of Minnie Temple. She was all that.

Scene from Act II of John Cort's mammoth new production of the Pixley-Luders comedy opera King Dodo, at the Savoy Theatre, next week. The arrival of the King in Spookjaland.

Valencia Theatre

San Franciscans, with years of Tivoli experience behind them, are unusually exacting in the matter of operettas and musical comedies. The Gay Musician, however, this week's bill at the Valencia, ought to appeal, even to a critical public. Unlike most musical comedies, The Gay Musician tells a consecutive, coherent story; the music, by Julien Edwards, is bright and fairly catchy, and although the young prima donna, Texas Guinan is featured, her role never predominates enough to spoil the balance of the cast. Add to this, good staging and handsome costuming, a large and efficient cast, together with an effective chorus, and one can readily see that The Gay Musician is a good bill. The librettist, Edward Siedle, has drawn his original inspiration from that time-honored French classic, Les Surprises du Divorce, but the surprises, in the case of The Gay Musician are limited to the scene in the second act, where the three bridegrooms find that their prospective brides are more closely related, in the ties of divorce, than they had anticipated. The complications must, of course, be seen to be appreciated, but an element of romance is rather cleverly introduced by re-uniting the gay musician and his wife, Marie, after their divorce, so the curtain finally falls to the tune of wedding bells. Miss Guinan, the star, is a bright, vivacious young lady who enters with real spontaneity into her role. Lottie Kendall, the wife of the musician, is a very pleasing actress and singer, and Margaret Crawford makes good as the mother-in-law. Harry Benham sings and acts very pleasingly in the title role, and Roger Gray, the comedian, bears a large part of the vitality of the performance on his capable shoulders. The rest of the cast is in excellent hands, Freda Klingel being an especially graceful dancing soubrette.

Butler-Nelke Matinee

On the afternoon of Wednesday, December 15, the Butler-Nelke Academy of Dramatic Arts will hold its first complimentary matinee, in Golden Gate hall. Admission is by invitation only, and eight hundred invitations have been issued. Untangling Tony, a two-act play by Helen F. Bagg, the farce A Gentle Jury, by Arlo Bates, and a comedy in manuscript by Martin V. Merle, entitled, The Countess' Strategy, will be presented. Twenty of the advanced students of the school will take part in the program.

Personals

G. F. GRAVES is the new manager in Redding.

WM. BERTRAM closed with The Spoilers Company in Petaluma Tuesday night.

ELMER BOOTH is the new stage director at the Grand Theatre in Salt Lake City.

EDDIE MITCHELL has joined the Mack Swain Company to play leads on the road. The company opens its season in Eureka on the 15th.

ALBERT McQUARRIE has retired from the Gerton stock of Long Beach, and is now a member of Brady & Grismer's Man of the Hour Company.

PRYCE MACKAYE has come back to the fold after dabbling in real estate for several years and will put on short cast comedies at the Farragut Theatre in Vallejo, opening on the 19th.

ED. BRESE has failed to find his chance in The Coast of Chance, which was sent to the warehouse last week.

GEORGE P. MATISON is the popular leading man with the Melba Palmer stock at the Lyric Theatre in Beaumont, Tex.

RIICHARD LAMBERT, the clever sunny dispositioned young man who hypnotizes newspaper men ahead of John Cort's King Dodo, is in town. Dick and his pipe are quite well acquainted here and have been royally welcomed by a host of friends.

TEXAS GUINAN and Lottie Kendall of the Gay Musician Company were guests of honor at a very elaborate dinner given them at the St. Francis Tuesday evening. The two young ladies have been extensively entertained by prominent society folks of this city.

WILLIAM WHITE, a stagehand at the Garrick Theatre, was stricken with a severe pain near his heart shortly before the curtain went up last night, and for a time it looked as if he would expire. He was taken to the McNutt hospital, and at a late hour was reported out of danger.

NAT GOODWIN, who has signed a three-year contract with William A. Brady, will open after New Year's in a brand new piece entitled An Old New Yorker. This piece is from the pen of Thomas Wise, author of A Gentleman from Mississippi, and according to Mr. Goodwin, is bound to be a winner from the start.

MARY MANNERING and her husband, James K. Hackett, whom she is suing for divorce, were in Kansas City last Tuesday. Both stayed at the Hotel Baltimore, but that does not mean that they are reunited. Far from it. They were at that hotel since Sunday, and neither saw the other. As for Hackett, he didn't care to talk about the matter, and Miss Mannering said that she wouldn't desire to see any newspaper men this week. Elise, the 5-year-old daughter of the Hacketts, is with her mother, and in her presence there comes a chance for a repetition of an occurrence last year, which caused the temporary abandonment of the divorce proceedings. Conditions in that case were about the same as they are now.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the announcement in New York last Wednesday that Judge Foster had dismissed the indictment for perjury against Mrs. Ben Teal, wife of Charles Frohman's stage manager, her attorney, Maurice Blumenthal, came forward with a statement that Mrs. Teal would bring suit for heavy damages and that Frank Gould would be made one of the defendants. Blumenthal said: The question of money damages is not the greater point involved and we have not determined the amount of the suit as yet. But there is no doubt that one of the defendants will be Frank Gould and all others who were implicated in the plot against Mrs. Teal will be named as defendants, too.

The Orpheum

Quinlan & Mack in their second week still maintain their position as the leading comedy feature of the show. Their Traveling Dentist is a very, very funny vehicle for the clever straight work of Dan Quinlan and the screamingly funny black face comedy of Keller Mack. Mr. Mack becomes better and more unctuous every year and his singing of up-to-date songs is particularly well done and enjoyable. One—Meet Me on the Board Walk, Dearie—(his own composition), is one of the biggest song hits heard here in years and invariably gets six or seven encores. Wm. H. Thompson, in the Conan Doyle playlet, Waterloo, a bit of striking and effective portraiture, is presented with a dramatic skill and an artistic finesse that cannot be too highly commended. Mr. Thompson's support was good. Eva Taylor, who created a veritable sensation here a couple of years ago in Chums, has a new sketch this time, called Mrs. Jones Smith Carey. It is not particularly good and there is very little opportunity for the actors. The most striking characters are offered to the Irish cook and the negro janitor, and the two actors entrusted with these two parts handle them with fine effect. Florence Bindley, a pleasing, magnetic and plump little lady, who has a real, enjoyable soubrette quality, is effective in a singing and instrumental act. Her dressing is rich and in good taste. Stella Morrisini has a good dog act, and is a beautiful woman. The rest of the bill consists of The Two Bobs and Mabel McCane from last week.

Pantages-Central

There is a very good bill here this week. The opening act, Laughlin's Trained Dogs, is entirely different from other animal acts. The dogs are very intelligent, and have an exceedingly kind master, and the other stunts are skilfully done. Kennedy & Kennedy, of Primrose fame, are clever dancers, without a doubt. Nina Nestor and company have in Wilmer & Vincent's Thief in a Night a very clever playlet. Miss Nestor, the miniature Lillian Russell, is very clever as Helen Moore, and she handles her situations with artistic effect and works up the act with most amusing results. Mr. Sweeney, as Jack Swift, deserves special mention. Charles Kembling in illustrated songs, has made good up to date. Deas, Reed & Deas, colored artists, are great favorites and why not? They have an act that makes people talk when they go out. They have voices and they certainly can dance. Their wardrobe is beautiful, Ella Deas showing some beautiful gowns. The act has the best finish of any act of its kind. Mr. Reed is a comedian of real ability. Laskey's Hoboes, late of the Orpheum circuit made their usual hit. Two interesting pictures conclude the bill.

American Theatre

From the bill at the American this week one would think Manager Pilling was trying to make each week top the other, for the shows seem to be better each week. The Labadens and Folly, the canine wonder, have a very good act and have been favorites for three or four weeks, while playing over the city. Dan Ahern, the Human Bird, presents something new and novel. His imitations are clever and he does some great whistling. Harry Bernard, in O'Hara's Mishaps, is playing his last week, and from his reception and the decided hit he and his company have made, the public will be sorry to have him leave. Each and every one in Mr. Bernard's company deserve special mention for the interest taken in their work during their engagement here. Mr. Bernard has selected a cast of clever actors. The girls always work well and always look pretty. Mr. Bernard and Mr. Rowe are a splendid team, and both are comedians. Harry Hallen is a tower of strength. May Bernard is always pleasing, and works and looks well. Spaulding and Dupree have a novel act, Mr. Spaulding being a clever acrobat, and Miss Dupree, a beautiful singer, Their talk in one is clever. Lorraine Buchanan, assisted by Robert Russel, has a very pretty act, which is full of good comedy and funny situations. Miss Buchanan is a very well known woman in the East, where she has been a star for years. She is fast becoming a favorite here. She wears some stunning gowns and is a handsome and most attractive woman. Welcome back to Budd Ross, the clever comedian. Every line, every move by Mr. Ross brings a laugh. He is a decidedly original performer and is funny without being conscious of it. Mr. Ross is a drawing card in any house and his receptions proves the comedian's popularity. He is given capital assistance by Wilton Dale. C. J. Norris and his trained baboons close the bill. Mr. Norris plainly shows his wonderful ability to train animals, for the baboons are seen in most unexpected stunts. They are wonderfully clever. The pictures are exceptionally interesting and conclude the show.

The National

The best bill that has been presented at the National in a year is on this week. Max Duffeck, who bills himself as the novelty contortionist, is certainly all that. He plays musical instruments of all kinds standing on his head and is a novel act. Alexander Von Mitzel and Isis Maynard have one of the prettiest sketches seen here in many a day. The idea of the sketch is new and there is good comedy and some pathos all through the act. Mr. Von Mitzel is a well known star in the East, and his wife is talented to a degree. They combine the qualities of exceptional good looks and an ability to act. Mrs. Von Mitzel has a very natural way which makes her part stand out most vividly. She wears her gowns beautifully and is a stunning woman. Mr. Von Mitzel, as the Colorado miner, is splendid, and the act is a big hit. Josephine Gassman and her picks, are known as well as any act which plays on the Coast. Each season Miss Gassman plays here and always achieves exceptional popularity. Josephine Gassman is a clever woman and a most magnetic one. Her picks show fine training. W. C. Hoefler and company have a sensational cycle act. At last we have a girl act that is different from the rest. Tom Linton and his Jungle Girls show a very pretty act. The jungle maids are all handsome girls. The Queen, being a typical Nell Brinkley type. The music and songs with the exception of the Yama Yama Man, are by Mr. Linton, and are all good. The act is a hit and is enhanced by a most attractive special set. The Rusticana Trio, the Parisian street singers, have good voices and good music. An immense hit scored by Inza & Lorella, Colly Lorella being in the same class with Marcellena, the world's greatest clown. Besides being a wonderful clown, Mr. Lorella is one of our best acrobats. Mr. Inza is one of the greatest high jumpers now before the public. The act is known all over Europe and this country, and is classed among the best.

Vaudeville Notes

Fred Lincoln, general manager of the Sullivan-Considine vaudeville circuit, is now traveling through Oklahoma and Texas, with a view to adding the Southwest to the already imposing amount of territory covered by John W. apolis and St. Paul. The Minneapolis house will seat 1,800 and will cost $150,000.

Harry Adams, a vaudeville actor, known on the stage as F. S. Williams, committed suicide in the lobby of the Ward Hotel, Fort Dodge, Ia., December 3, when he was refused permission to see Jennie Sagers. Miss Sagers has been traveling with Adams as a member of a team, but left him, alleging cruelty.

The famous Junie McCree, known and loved in San Francisco by every one from the newsboy to the millionaire, is on his way out to the Coast with his act, The Man from Denver. Mr. McCree today is one of the greatest living character actors, and Frisco people will welcome him with open arms.

The American Theatrical Exchange, in the Westbank building, has been organized with Otis Laurelle, an experienced showman, in charge. The exchange announces its ability to book any good act and to supply clubs and private theatricals with talent.

Vaudeville Notes

Another change in Coast vaudeville is promised by the establishment of what is known as the Pantages-Howell vaudeville circuit, which is to bring many of the first-class circuit acts to the Central Theatre in Market street during the coming season. Ernest Howell, proprietor of the Central, has returned from Seattle, where he has been in consultation with Alex. Pantages and consummated plans for the operation of a vaudeville circuit that will practically guarantee performers fifty-two weeks work each season. The route taken will be from St. Paul through to Seattle, down the coast to San Diego and back by way of Salt Lake City and Denver. From a talk we had with Mr. Howell, this new combination means a number "two" Pantages circuit and a persistent endeavor to form a new vaudeville circuit that will be enabled to supply cheap or high-priced acts. The idea is evidently to try and form this circuit in many of the dramatic houses of the Coast that have not tried vaudeville.

Arrangements have just been perfected between the Shuberts and William Morris whereby Harry Lauder will be seen on a tour of many of the Shubert theatres. The Scotchman's first appearance will be made in the West End Theatre December 6, after which he goes to Philadelphia, moving directly West. He will be surrounded by an all-star company of vaudeville artists, the roster including W. E. Whittle, Edith Helena, Midgely & Carlisle, the Seven Perezoffs, Almont & Dumont, and Hanlon & Clifton. Mr. Lauder will travel by special train and will be accompanied by William Morris and a representative of the Shuberts.

Timothy D. Sullivan, better known as "Big Tim," the New York politician and member of the vaudeville firm of Sullivan & Considine, has been appointed permanent stake holder for the Jeffries-Johnson match. All the forfeit money, $40,000, has been deposited with Sullivan by consent of all interested parties.

Donald Bowles, who, with his company of four, plays Guilty at the Orpheum next week, is as clever a stage director as actor, and thereby hangs a tale. Last summer he was playing a summer stock engagement as leading man of the Neill company at St. Paul, Minn. His friend of long standing, George Bloomquest, an Orpheum favorite by the way, was playing a summer engagement in the same company. Mr. Bloomquest was about to give a trial performance of his new sketch, Nerve, by Victor H. Smalley, which has since proven such a success in vaudeville. Bloomquest insisted that the sketch should not go on unless Bowles had the absolute direction of the production. The author, perforce, submitted, and contrary to the usual custom, despite the numerous controversies at rehearsals concerning change of text and situation, Mr. Bowles and Mr. Smalley became fast friends. Smalley decided that vaudeville was the one place for Bowles and that he was the one man to write Bowles' sketch. Bowles laughingly assented, providing Smalley would write him as good a sketch as he had written for Bloomquest. A couple of weeks later Smalley suddenly stopped Bowles on the street and said, "I've got it!" "Got what?" said Bowles. "A sketch as good as Bloomquest's," replied Smalley. "Humph," said Bowles grimly, "I don't come from Missouri, but I was born in Philadelphia, which means I have got to be shown." "All right," said Smalley, "one week more and I will show you." In one week Bowles was "shown," Bowles accepting it as the best dramatic sketch he had ever read. Then came the question of name. "Guilty" was decided upon, and all who have seen it agree it could have no more appropriate title. The sketch has been the dramatic sensation of vaudeville.

Ed Redmond Buys Theatre Lease in San Jose

The Theatre Jose of San Jose has changed hands. The sale of the lease of that playhouse was consummated in San Jose Monday, when Ed Redmond, the theatrical manager-actor, and W. T. Warren, president of the San Jose Taximeter Company, took over the interests of the Jose Amusement Company, of which Harry Bercovich is president. The theatre will pass into the control of the new management on December 20, and means that the death knell has been sounded for vaudeville in San Jose for some time at least. The Ed Redmond stock company will be installed at the Jose. The present lease will not ex-arrangements are pending to open the theatre with stock a week after the close of the vaudeville season. It is no secret that the Jose theatre has not proved a mint as a vaudeville house, the increase in the number of the picture shows proving a strong competitor. Harry Bercovich who has been in charge of the Theatre Jose said the last week of vaudeville will close on December 20, when the new company will assume control and possession of the theatre.

Correspondence

PORTLAND, Or., Dec. 6.—Bungalow Theatre (Calvin Heilig, manager; William Pangle, resident manager). The latter part of the past week brought to us King Dodo, John Cort's offering, and the play was well patronized. William Friend was cast in the title role, and hardly came up to requirements, but the balance of the cast was acceptable, especially Eleanor Kent and Zoe Barnett, these two carrying off the honors. Last night, the attraction was The Soul Kiss. This merry offering is filled with bright, catchy music, and the cast is good, and the chorus pretty. The scenery was also worthy of mention. Mlle. Pertina is the star of the production, and lived up to all the good things we have heard of her artistic dancing. Baker Theatre (George L. Baker, manager; Milton Seaman, business manager). That old standby, Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway, packed this theatre at both performances yesterday. The leading parts are entrusted to Elizabeth Drew and Charley Brown, who plays the roles of Mary and Kid Burns, respectively. The chorus is the only feature of the play that does not compare favorably with previous productions of the play offered here. Many members of the old companies are again found in the ranks of the present production. Next week, The Land of Nod. Portland Theatre (Russell & Drew, managers). This house has not any company booked for this week, but Mr. Hopkinson returns the forepart of next week for two nights. The following week brings The Man from Home. Orpheum Theatre (John F. Cordray, manager). The past week broke all local records for this house from the financial standpoint, caused by the high-class bill offered the past week. Donald Bowles and his company in the playlet Guilty was the headliner, and the piece is a worthy vehicle to portray the ability of Bowles. The Kleins in their comedy bicycle act was the very best act of that sort ever seen here, while the act of Miss Lee White and George Perry was excellent. In fact, each and every act could have been featured, and no one could have registered any kick. This week's bill: Edwin Barry & Co.; Fay, Two Coleys & Fay; Potter-Hartwell Trio; Brahm's Quartette; Jack McKay; Carletta, and The Tossing Austins. Lyric Theatre (Keating & Flood, managers). This week's bill is Tempest and Sunshine, and this old-time drama seemed to hit right home with the audiences yesterday at this theatre. The company are all well cast, and the management have left nothing wanting in the production. Mr. Robert Athon and Miss Priscilla Knowles, also Mr. Will Howard, gave good portrayals, and the balance of the stock company were letter perfect in their respective roles. Good-sized audiences were present at both performances yesterday. Grand Theatre (Frank Coffinberry, manager). For this week the following acts are offered: Bohemian Sextette; Myrtle Byrne & Co.; Leon Rogee; Gertie Everett; Nat Nazarro Troupe; Hoey & Mozar, and Fred Bauer. A. W. W.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Dec. 8.—At the Opera House, Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, manager, 10th, will be presented the successful musical comedy, The Three Twins. At the Unique, (J. W. Leonard, lessee and manager), 16th, the Schuberts will offer The Man from Home. The Giron Stock Company is now at the Unique for an indefinite stay, with a change of program semi-weekly. The Singing Bandits and The Shepherd King are booked at the Kiplinger house for the near future. Manager Leonard of the Unique has been making extensive improvements in that house, back of the curtain, to accommodate the coming Schubert attractions. J. E. RICH.

Alcazar Theatre

Channing Pollock's dramatization of Miriam Michelson's story of a girl thief, In the Bishop's Carriage, will be the next attraction, commencing Monday evening. When this play was presented in the Sutter street home of drama two years ago it made an emphatic hit. Evelyn Vaughan will have the role of Nance Olden, the young criminal who is reformed by kindness; John Ince will be seen as Latimer, the attorney who converts her; Will R. Walling will again play the part of Tom Dorgan, the burglar from whose control the girl is saved, and all the other Alcazar favorites will have characters well suited to their respective talents. In the staging there will be augmented realism by the introduction of a genuine carriage and an up-to-date automobile.

The Orpheum

Donald Bowles, a well-graced actor of great ability and popularity, who is favorably remembered as one of the brightest lights of the James Neill Company, will head the new bill in the one-act romantic drama, Guilty, which was written for him by Victor H. Smalley, the author of Nerve, in which George Bloomquist recently made such a great hit. Mr. Bowles will be supported by Nieta Quinn, Ronald Bradbury, Stanford S. Gould, and Samuel Berg. The Klein Family, seven in number, will be seen in a novel cycling act, full of humor and dexterity. Their performance differs widely from any other cycling troupe and their feats of daring are interspersed with touches of genuine humor. Harry Fox and the Millership Sisters will appear in a diverting assortment of song, dance and chatter which they call Artistic Nonsense. Carl Nobel, the Scandinavian ventriloquist, will be a unique feature of the new bill. Nobel's ideas are entirely new and he introduces several remarkable mechanical dummies. Next week will be the last of Florence Bindley, Stella H. Morrisini, and the Four Floods. It will also conclude the engagement of that delightful comedienne, Eva Taylor and her company, who will say farewell in the picturesque fantasy, Dreamona, written especially for her by Lawrence Grattan. A novel series of motion pictures as usual will terminate the performance.

town section of San Francisco, marking another step in the re-establishment of the theatrical conditions as they existed before the fire. The Savoy Theatre, on McAllister street, a few steps from Market, will open its doors this Sunday night, Dec. 12, and the attraction will be John Cort's mammoth new production of his revival of the Pixley-Luders comic opera, King Dodo. The Savoy is under the direction of the Northwestern Theatrical Association, of which John Cort is general manager. It was built for George A. Storey and the entire plant represents a large investment. Fred W. Bussey, an experienced theatrical man, is the resident manager for Mr. Cort. The seating capacity of the theatre is about 1,400 and there are twelve boxes which will accommodate six persons each. A portion of the orchestra space will be devoted to divans, each seating two persons. The stage is 40 by 75 feet and is splendidly equipped. The building is Class A in every particular and the exacting conditions imposed by the fire laws have been more than met. In the inaugural attraction, King Dodo, will be found many San Francisco favorites. The prima donna is Eleanor Kent, who, as Mabel Love, is well known here as she was born and raised in this city. She sings the role of Piola. Zoe Barnett, who was long a favorite at the Princess, is playing Annette and sings the popular number, The Tale of a Bumble Bee. Laura Millard, who plays Queen Lili, was a great favorite at the Tivoli in its palmy days, and William H. West, also with the Tivoli company at that time, is Dr. Fizz. William Friend plays the delightful old king; Osborn Clemson sings the tenor role of Pedro; Louise Mink is the Angela and Charles J. Udell plays Mudge. The chorus is said to be one of the best-voiced, best dressed, best drilled and most attractive to be found in comic opera. There is a lot of bright music in King Dodo. King Dodo will run but one week, with matinees Thursday and Saturday, and will be followed with Forty-five Minutes from Broadway.

Shuberts May Not Send Plays West

The Shuberts announced recently that they had given permission to the Western Managers' Association, then in session in Chicago, to withdraw from their agreement to book their attractions direct. The Shuberts explain that of the plays they have in New York none is likely to be moved away at present, and for that reason they cannot keep their agreement to send these plays into the Western territory. The Western Managers' Association constitute the theatre managers who, last spring, agreed to keep "open door" to all attractions they considered meritorious. This agreement followed the trip of J. J. Shubert to the Pacific Coast. By the "open door," it was then explained, these houses were not to be considered affiliated with any particular booking agency, but that they would welcome the plays of Klaw & Erlanger and of the Shuberts with equal pleasure. Klaw & Erlanger, representing the syndicate, stated that if these houses booked Shubert attractions they could have none of the syndicate plays. Last week there was a report current that several members of the association had come to New York to interview A. L. Erlanger on the possibility of making some arrangement by which they could have syndicate plays as well as others. Earnest search failed to disclose the time or place of meeting with Mr. Erlanger, if any occurred. It is said that the Western Managers' Association has been booking plays furnished by a Chicago firm, name unknown, which acted as a Western booking agency and was not affiliated with either Klaw & Erlanger or the Shuberts. In this case it would appear that the association had not been booking all of the attractions it received direct from the Shubert offices.

Manager Billy Butler, of the T. Daniel Frawley company, left Seattle, taking with him, to serve as members of the new company which opened in Winnipeg on Nov. 29, Harry Pollard, Ed Conway and Marguerite Fisher. After the winter season in Winnipeg the company will go to Southeastern Alaska and Yukon river points, also

Florence Roberts' Plans

Florence Roberts began rehearsals in New York last week for her first tour under the direction of the Shuberts. She will appear in three plays with a company large enough for all of them, and a special production for each one. These plays will be The Transformation, a new drama by Rupert Hughes; Gloria, by James Fagin, and The Movers, by Martin Morton. Miss Roberts' tour will take her to the Pacific Coast early in the year, and through the Western territory where she is best known. She has played only a few engagements in New York, the latest being in Edward Milton Royle's play, The Struggle Everlasting. She will play East in the spring.

Lose Nance O'Neill

Supreme Court Justice Seabury in New York recently denied an application by the Shuberts to continue an injunction restraining Nance O'Neill from playing under the management of David Belasco or any one else but themselves. Miss O'Neill said that she was forced to seek an engagement elsewhere because the Shuberts had nothing for her to do. She is to appear in Mr. Belasco's new play, The Lily. The court declared that it appeared the Shuberts had not kept their part of the contract and had forfeited any right to the relief they asked for.

Bailey and Austin in the Top O' Th' World

Perhaps the key-note of the success of The Top o' th' World is the fact that it has Bailey and Austin and countless surprises. Effort was made by the producing manager to escape the stereotyped form of entertainment, common in musical productions, and it is said that he has succeeded. The stars are Bailey and Austin, a clever pair of vaudevillians on the Montgomery and Stone type; a big chorus of beautiful girls who swing through the delightful numbers, which are many, and who never fail to come in for their share of favorable comment; the Collie Ballet that is novel in the extreme—six girls and six white collie dogs perform a unique dance that is regarded everywhere as remarkable as will be seen when it is given in this city. The book is by Mark E. Swan, lyrics by James O'Dea, music by Manuel Klein and Anna Caldwell, the dances by William Rock and Luigi Albertieri.

Willie Collier May Get Wife's Estate

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Through the mysterious disappearance of the late will of his wife, Mrs. Louise Allen Collier, executed and attested two days before her death on November 9 last, William Collier, actor, may inherit all of the personal property, valued at $50,000, and in addition, an equity for life in Mrs. Collier's country estate at St. James, L. I. Mrs. Collier and her husband had lived apart, and by her will executed forty-eight hours before her death, Mrs. Collier bequeathed all her property, both personal and real, to her mother, Mrs. Rachel Allen. Mrs. Allen has begun action to establish the will and testament of her daughter.

plane of theatrical art in the construction of our theatres, which has already taken on a decisive improvement that in a few years is bound to place this nation in an unapproachable position as regards the material side of dramatics, and this, too, through the pride of individuals, for it is very doubtful if the movement will ever be fostered by our own government. In conclusion we wish to express our thanks again to the Bureau of Latin American Republics in Washington, which has made it possible to show these pictures.

John Drew Injured

As a result of being thrown from his horse while riding with his daughter in Central Park at noon on December 7, John Drew was unable to appear that night in Inconstant George at the Empire Theatre. The Empire was closed. Mr. Drew was removed from the scene of the accident to the Presbyterian hospital, where he was attended by Dr. Ramsdell. At first the seriousness of his injuries did not become apparent. The first reports from the hospital spoke only of a fractured collar bone, near the left shoulder, and a contusion of the left forehead. Later it was ascertained that there was also concussion of the brain. This soon began to clear away, and at 4 o'clock the actor's condition was announced at the hospital as good. Miss Louise, Mr. Drew's daughter, went with him to the hospital. Miss Drew said that she and her father were riding in Central Park when Mr. Drew's horse suddenly stumbled, throwing its rider heavily to the ground. As he landed on the path before the horse, the latter fell on him, rolling across the actor's body. Leaning forward in her saddle, Miss Drew got hold of the other horse's bridle and pulled the animal to one side before it had a chance to roll on her father again or to trample him. Late that night the report from the hospital was that Mr. Drew was resting comfortably, without showing signs for changing for the worse. It was not known when the actor would be able to leave the hospital or return to the stage.

New Scheme for Vaudeville

From a reliable source it is learned that the baseball deal consummated in Philadelphia, whereby the Philadelphia National league baseball club passed into the hands of a syndicate, with Horace S. Fogle, a sporting writer of Philadelphia, as president of the club, but is the entering wedge for what eventually will prove a close alliance, if not an amalgamation, of the baseball and theatrical interests of the country. Two theatrical men of national reputation are said to be interested in the purchase of the Phillies, with baseball as a minor issue to the theatrical interest. One of these men, it is announced, is B. F. Keith, of Keith & roctor. An outdoor vaudeville show, known as the Hippodrome, is planned for the Philadelphia park next season, starting in the spring and running until fall. This was tried at Columbia park, Philadelphia, last summer and it developed into such a money maker that the experiment also was tried at Forbes field, the home of the Pittsburg club, later in the season. Again the venture proved to be a success, so successful, in fact, that the big theatrical interests in the country have studied the situation closely and decided that the time is ripe for a string of hippodromes, planned on the order of a vaudeville circuit. The purchase of the Phillies is believed to be but a starter for the bringing into the fold of other baseball clubs throughout the country and the using of their parks for such a purpose. For years the baseball parks of the country have been used for only about 80 afternoons in the year. This has resulted in a heavy outlay by the managers, who, until a few months ago, saw no opportunity to get any revenue from their parks at the end of the baseball season, and when the local team was away from home, except by an occasional rental to some baseball or football team.

American Plays Fail in London

LONDON, Dec. 10. — American theatrical successes continue to prove failures in England. The Servant in the House, like The Great Divide, has played to empty houses. The Passing of the Third Floor Back is also a failure, and there is every indication that the London playgoers will not tolerate plays which cause him to think. The theatre, to his mind, is purely for amusement, and thoughtful and serious themes are banned as failures. Mid-Channel, False Gods and Madame X. are cases in point. The result is that London is losing its serious actors, who are going to America. Beerbohm Tree and Charles Wyndham are contemplating lengthy American tours. The only manager feeling the English theatrical pulse accurately is George Edwardes. He gives all the flippancies required and his theatre is filled daily and nightly, while the theatres of the serious drama hover on the edge of bankruptcy.

John Griffiths and His Defeat

John Griffith, in Savannah a few nights ago, furnished a pathetic climax to a long life of endeavor and ambition. Mr. Griffith has long been a Shakespearean actor, affecting generally the popular-priced circuits. He was seen in The Bells, Faust, Macbeth and other dramas of the old brand. This season he has been playing through the South in Faust to extremely poor business. At Savannah one of the actors attached the scenery and costumes for his unpaid salary. That night Griffith stepped before the small audience in his street clothes. Tears streamed down his cheeks. He almost choked as he made the following speech: In vain have I fought to make the elevating plays earn sufficient money to more than keep body and soul together. You witness my absolute failure. I have been beaten. For 23 years I have made a study of Shakespeare. But the public won't accept it. I concede my defeat. If you care to see me as Mephisto, as I am now, with the other members of the company in their costumes, you may remain and witness the final efforts of a dying tragedian. I may not be a good actor, but God knows I am conscientious. Six people went to the box office and got their money back. The others saw Griffith play his Mephisto without makeup and in his street clothes, and with no scenery whatever. The company straggled back to New York.

Charles Frohman has arranged his booking for the present season so that nearly every one of his most prominent stars will be seen at the new Columbia Theatre by next July. John Drew, Maude Adams, Hattie Williams, Wm. H. Crane are among those to come.

ST. PAUL.—Well, St. Paul and Minneapolis are both enjoying a week of good things in the theatrical line, headed by Klaw & Erlanger's $100,000 symposium of beauty and fun, Little Nemo, with a cast of 150, including a number of musical comedy stars, most prominent of which is Joseph Cawthorn. This being "Halo Gala" week, Little Nemo leads the festivities at the St. Paul Metropolitan and opened to a packed house, 5th, for week. At the Grand, Beverly pleased immensely, week 5th. St. Elmo comes, 12th. Cressy and Dayne headed a splendid bill at the Orpheum, Edna Aug running second, while the Majestic was well patronized on account of Coin's dog actors. That distinguished St. Paulite, Pat White, and his Gaiety Girls, filled the Star at every performance. The Barrier, at Minnesota Metropolitan, did well all week, 5th, while the Bijou startled the natives of saw-dust town with Via Wireless, a good play containing some very good and very bad actors. The ladies of the company are particularly strong. Louise Gunning and Jess Dandy, in the new operetta, Marcelle, pleased at the Lyric. The Orpheum, Miles and Unique had strong bills, doing their usual good business. The popular East-side house, the Princess, was packed all week to see the Neil Company in Carmen. A few of the coming attractions for the Lyric (Shuberts') are Blanche Ring in The Yankee Girl; Wilton Lackaye in The Battle; Viola Allen in The White Sister; James T. Powers in Havana; William Faversham in Herod, and others. Lou Scott and wife returned home after a long trip abroad. I was in Sweden yesterday. You know it's only a short ride to Minneapolis. AL. G. FLOURNOY.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 4.—Tulane Theatre: Supported by practically the same company as that of last season, and fresh from her conquest of dear old London town, Rose Stahl finished her second engagement in this city with gratifying results. Miss Stahl is an integral part of The Chorus Lady, everything revolving about her charming personality. Her mannerisms and voice are unique, and the intelligent study and thought given to the role of Patricia O'Brien makes the play a classic among present-day attractions. The cast is well balanced, particularly creditable work being done by Claire Laine, Giles Shine, Walter Pennington, Wilfred Lucas and Isabella Goodwin. Next week, Cohan and Harris Minstrels; Dec. 12, Kyrle Bellew. Crescent Theatre: Theatre-goers have been entertained handsomely this week by A Knight for a Day, another of H. H. Frazee's enterprises, who has already gained fame and wealth with his Girl Question and The Time, the Place and the Girl. As in the last two pieces, interest centers about a small role, which in the present play is that of a lawyer who graduated out of the waiter class, where he learned well the lessons of cheek and persistence. Jonathan Joy was cleverly sustained by Edw. Hurne, who gave considerable ingenuity to the role. He has a method that is both breezy and unctuous. Second in favor comes Grace De Mar, a pretty girl, whose charms are not hidden by the Sis Hopkins' servant make-up. Miss De Mar has an insinuatingly roguish smile that will always cause us to sit up and take notice. Particularly pleasing were the chorus and scenic effects. Somewhere in the female contingent was heard a glorious voice, clear and bird-like, and by far the best of the company. As the owner is doubtless aware of her valuable asset, the thought naturally occurs if she will ever realize her ambition. Next week, The Right of Way. W. L. McCONNELL.

SPOKANE, Nov. 29.—Ezra Kendall in The Vinegar Buyer, at the Auditorium, 25-27, was well received and played to large and well satisfied audience. The next attraction will be The Alaskan, Dec. 10-11.; The Third Degree, 12-14. At the Spokane, Honeymoon Trail, which will be here for one week, opened to a packed house. The company is strong, songs catchy and chorus well costumed. George Primrose's Minstrels follows. Alice Lloyd at the Orpheum is credited with making the longest jump in vaudeville history, coming direct from New Orleans to open in Spokane. Miss Lloyd is a dainty and most fascinating comedienne and made a big hit on her opening performances. Other good acts are the McNaughtons, English eccentrics, introducing their comedy boxing match; the Brothers Permaine in their specialty, Nightingales Making Love. La Tosca, the talkative juggler Cross-Josephine in their travesty of melodrama, Dying to Act; the Two Arkanssas English concertina soloists; and piano accompaniment; Joe Gavza, Spanish acrobat; Orpheum pictures. A most pleasing bill at the Washington includes The Operator, the dramatic sensation of vaudeville, by Leo Cooper and company; Hickey's comedy circus, introducing the bucking mule Obey; Le Brun, grand opera trio, in selections from Faust, Carmen, Tannhauser, Rigoletto; Gardner-Rankin-Griffin, a trio of musical comedians; Edgar Berger, the noted equilibrist; Ekert-Francis, conversationalists, and Washingtonscope. A good bill at Pantages includes Arthur Houston, headliner; Czinka Panna, Hungarian violin virtuoso; Kiernan, Walters and Kiernan, comedy playlet, A Royal Cook; Orpheus comedy four singing comedians, Jacobs, Sandel, Banwell, Jumpers and jumping comiques, William D. Gilson and motion pictures. The Empire—Alman, Nevis and Alman, novelty singers and dancers; The Fishers, spectacular contortion act; Bob Hendricks, the Prince of Cork, and talkologist; Mabel H. E. Paulson, soprano, singing The Garden of Roses, and 2,000 feet of motion pictures. SMYTH.

The interior decoration of the new Columbia Theatre has already been started, and from present indications will be finished at least ten days ahead of the date set for the opening of the magnificent new playhouse being built for Gottlob, Marx and Company.

If the devil himself is such an interesting fellow as Sanford Dodge portrays him, it might not be very unpleasant to meet the original anywhere outside his own habitation, after all.—Phoenix, Ariz., Journal.

Spotlights

Donald Crisp, an actor in The Yankee Prince Co., while playing at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles, slipped and fell on a peevish bulldog belonging to Joseph Leslie, a member of the same company. The enraged canine thereupon seized Crisp in the region of the pistol pocket and hung on tenaciously. In struggling to release himself, the actor made a wild leap, lost his balance and bounded back onto the bull pup, which took a fresh hold, inflicting a flesh wound on the leg. Stage hands intervened and dog and man were pried apart. Crisp was taken to the Receiving Hospital, where his wounds were dressed. He was able to leave the place on foot, hobbling back to the theatre and then to his room at the Mansfield, No. 428 West Second street. Crisp's shoes were wet and it was while dancing a few fancy steps behind the scenes that he slipped and fell on the pup.

Wallace Brownslow, actor, singer and chorister, one time of the Tivoli, last week, after collecting all the money due him, disappeared from the city, leaving behind him, absolutely penniless, a wife and child. While it is generally believed that in this instance Brownslow has departed for good and all, his wife patiently smiles and awaits his return. She sincerely believes that he is gone—but not forever. When his money runs out and he sobers up he will return, she said philosophically.

As the Sun Went Down is by no means a good name for the fine Western drama that opened a three days' engagement at the Majestic Theatre to a capacity house last night. The name smacks too much of melodrama to convey any real idea of the play, which is about the best of its type ever seen in Peoria. The story is powerful and appealing with an intensely human atmosphere and it gives the really splendid cast a matchless opportunity for the display of their gifts. It is something to conjure by—that cast. First, there is Estha Williams, the little woman who enchanted all Peoria by her acting in the character of Parepa in the Old Cross Roads. She has a fine new part—that of Colonel Billy, and is even better fitted to her wary, magnetic personality than was that of Parepa and to say that she makes the most of it is but doing scant justice to the charm with which she invests the character. W. A. Whitecar is another old favorite who received a hearty welcome last night. As The Tarantula he does some of the best character acting seen here in a coon's age. The success of the presentation also owes something to A. E. Chatterton, who is inimitable as the preacher, and the entire cast is a remarkably strong and well balanced one. The play is staged in lavish fashion, some of the scenes of the far Western mountains being strikingly beautiful.—Peoria Star.

With the appearance of the New York symphony orchestra in the Greek Theatre, University of California next May, the residents of the bay cities may be enabled to witness the dancing of Isadore Duncan, the exponent of Greek posture dances. According to the present arrangement between Miss Duncan and the orchestra she dances during the intermission in each concert. A contract has been made by the musical and dramatic committee of the university for a concert during the orchestra's trip to this coast next May and although no mention has been made of Miss Duncan as a feature, it has been announced by Prof. William Dallam Armes, chairman of the university committee, that if the danseuse is still with the organization she will appear here.

Well known theatrical folks are with Manager Shanley at the Continental Hotel down town on Ellis street, near Powell: Ted Leary, head of Fritz Scheff; Arthur A. Lotto, ahead of The Gay Musician; Ned Nye, the vaudevillian; Harry Davidson, ahead of Ezra Kendall; John Slocum, back with the The Gay Musician Company; Fred Bucey, manager of the New Savoy Theatre; Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics; Charles Dow Clark, of the Alcazar Stock Company; Daniel Lawlor, tragedian of The Shepherd King Company.

The success of Bob Burns in adding two or three houses each week to his independent-circuit is attracting attention. Bob always did have the reputation of being a hustler.

Rob Roy Gives a Comprehensive Idea of the Most Interesting Phases of New York Theatrical Activity

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—Up to last week it had been a long time since anybody but the Rev. Thomas Dixon had tackled the negro question in a play. Three or four years ago, Dixon wrote The Clansman, and as it is still doing business out on the road, he is probably glad he did it. But with the exception of Uncle Tom's Clansman nobody else has seen fit to talk about the negro upon the stage for a long, long time. Last week, however, there was produced at the New Theatre a play called The Nigger, by Edward Sheldon. The Nigger goes after the race question with a vengeance, but the reflection induced by witnessing the first performance is that it is too big a question for young Mr. Sheldon. The subject is not a pleasant one, but the play contains some moving scenes. One such came with the arrival of the mob to lynch the cringing, whimpering negro criminal. Such another was the scene in which the old negro "mammy" betrayed the secret she had hidden for so many, many years. Still another was the modified form of assault when the Governor brutally embraced his horrified sweetheart. Individually, these scenes gripped the audience, and gripped it hard. Unfortunately, they were not well connected. There was no steady, remorseless advance from scene to scene. Several times Mr. Sheldon did not seem to know when he had reached a climax. His touch was hesitating, unsure. Moreover, he repeated himself frequently, said the same things time and again and dawdled with the obvious. In one respect the story of the play will not bear examination. It is inconceivable that any conventionally minded Southern girl could bring herself to think of marrying a "nigger." Yet after seeing the heroine stricken with horror at the revelation of her lover's ancestry, seeing her writhing at the touch of the man suddenly become loathsome to her, we are asked to consider the spectacle of the same girl only a few hours later complaining because her lover does not greet her with a kiss and desiring to follow him to the ends of the earth.

It is too much to ask. * * * The Lottery Man, which opened at the Bijou last Monday night, is a wide-awake farce, and for a larger part of its three acts is pretty certain to keep the average man or woman in good humor. Rida Johnson Young, who wrote it, has hit upon a fresh enough idea, the characters she outlines are genuinely funny, and the dialogue bright and snappy. Moreover, a capital little company gets the piece over the footlights with full effect in almost every scene and situation. Once in a great while the playing—or is it the play?—lies nearer burlesque than farce, and once in a great while more seriousness in the handling would produce more positive effects of humor. But on the whole, the thing is interesting. In fact, The Lottery Man promises not to be a very long chance for either producers, playwrights or the actors. The Lottery Man is known by that particular title because he decides to raffle himself off as a husband at a dollar a throw to any woman who will buy a coupon in a newspaper scheme that means thousands of dollars as well as wedding bells for the winner. The young man is a fresh-avery fresh young "journalist," (no "newspaper man" would have a chance to get into such a scrape,) and as he has borrowed $1,000 and sees no chance of paying it back he hits upon this plan for raising funds and—trouble. Of course, the minute the deal is on, the girl he would like to marry comes along. Then everybody who knows the pair gets busy buying up coupons for the right girl in the case. When she hears of it—in fact, when she learns that the young man himself has bought some in her name, she is properly indignant. Cyril Scott has not appeared to better advantage for a considerable length of time. Once only, in the last act, he took a scene in a key suggesting burlesque when obvious sincerity might have been better for the situation, but on the whole he played with clean-cut directness, freshness, and variety. His acting almost always has virility and sureness of touch, with the saving grace of a sense of humor manifested naturally and easily. Robert McKay, Mary Leslie Mayo, and Wallace Shape did the lesser parts nicely. * * * Massenet's admirable and thrice-charming Manon, which was brought back into the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House last season after a lapse of some years, was again performed last week at that theatre. In many respects it is the best of the prolific French composer's works. In Paris it is the most popular, and there were evidences from the attitude of our audience that it is likely to attain popularity here also. For some reason the directors of the Metropolitan have seen fit to eliminate the Cour la Reine scene in the version presented at this theatre. This leaves the subsequent scene at St. Sulpice totally unexplained. It also removes from the score one of the most charming musical numbers—that which follows Manon's entrance in a sedan chair and the ballet. The more or less celebrated "gavotte" has been transferred by this same process of rearrangement to the scene in the gambling house where it does not belong, and where it only serves to interrupt the dramatic action. However, Manon is much too pretty to be spoiled by a few omissions and rearrangements in its music. * * * Tosca was given again last week at the Manhattan Opera House, with the same cast as that which co-operated in the first production of the opera this season. Of these all except Mme. Carmen Melis were heard last season, and give an exceptionally good performance—Mr. Renaud and Mr. Zenatello especially in the leading men's parts, and Mr. Gilbert, who makes the subsidiary one of the sacristan a delightful character study. Mme. Melis is a striking and most attractive figure as the heroine, of dark Southern beauty and litheness. Her voice is powerful and penetrating. In passages of mezzo-forte it has its most pleasing quality, and then it is not without warm and expressive tones. She delivered some of the more melodic passages of Puccini's music effectively. Her personal appearance on the stage is a large factor in her favor in the impersonation of Tosca. Her acting shows skill and command of technical routine. She made a considerable impression on the audience, and was the recipient of much applause. Mr. de la Fuente conducted. * * * Is Matrimony a Failure? now in its fifth month at the Belasco Theatre, will continue at that playhouse until February 1. Then Mr. Belasco will face the proposition of moving Leo Ditrichstein's merry comedy to some other New York theatre to make room for his production of Eugene Walter's new play, Just a Wife. Where Is Matrimony a Failure? will go has not been determined, but it must move from the Belasco owing to the terms of Mr. Belasco's contract with Mr. Walter, which guarantees a production of Walter's new play on some date before February 2. * * * Andreas Dippel, administrative manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Charles Dalmores, the leading French tenor in the Manhattan Opera Company, were both on the witness stand in New York recently in the trial of the suit brought by the Conreid Metropolitan Opera Co. to recover $20,000 from M. Dalmores because he broke a contract signed with Conreid to sing at the Metropolitan this season. The case was called before Justice Bischoff and a jury, but because of the complicated questions involved the Court excused the jury. While Mr. Dippel was testifying, Mr. Dittenhoefer said: "I ask you not only as a manager to tell us what your opinion of the defendant's ability is, but as an artist. You yourself are a tenor, I believe." "Yes, I was a tenor once," said Mr. Dippel. "I sang tenor roles for twenty years. I consider Mr. Dalmores one of the greatest French tenors. He has a great repertoire. We had to engage four different tenors to sing his roles this year. There are a few other high-class tenors, but they are all under contract and we couldn't get them." Mr. Dittenhoefer asked D. M. Delmas if he desired Mr. Dippel to come to court that day for cross-examination, and the lawyer said: "I have no desire to have Herr Dippel return unless he will sing for us. If so, we will all be delighted." Justice Bischoff remarked that the Court would also be pleased if Mr. Dippel should return under such circumstances, and Mr. Dippel said he would be pleased. But Dippel didn't sing. * * * A meeting of the directors of the New Theatre was held recently in New York for the election of officers for the ensuing year. The present officers were all re-elected. They are William K. Vanderbilt, pres.; Clarence H. Mackay and William B. Osgood Field, vice-presidents; Otto H. Kahn, treasurer, and Henry Rogers Winthrop, secretary. At the performance of The Cottage in the Air, at the New Theatre last week, Lady Gray, wife of Earl Gray, governor general of Canada, was a guest of the theatre. Among her guests were Edward Sheldon, author of The Nigger, and Mr. and Mrs. John Corbin. * *

* When Henry W. Savage arrived recently in New York on the Amerika of the Hamburg-American Line from a two months' vacation trip to Europe, he announced three productions for early presentation in this country. The trio of novelties comprises Monckton Hoffe's comedy, The Little Damsel, a farce by Messrs. Nancey, Armont and Gavault, called Theodore & Co., that is now at the Nouveautés, Paris, and The Great Name, a Viennese comedy from the pens of Victor Leon of Merry Widow fame and Leo Field. The Little Damsel has just been produced at Wyndham's, London. "It is a comedy with very appealing sentiment," said Col. Savage, "and has rather quaint figures familiar to all Americans. It has a happy ending but also touches of appealing pathos. My Paris acquisition is a farce of errors, with many highly original tricks and unique situations. The Viennese comedy is not a musical work, although it has some unique musical features as incidents. Its theme is the disgust felt by a popular composer for the operetta that has brought him fame and fortune. The airs haunt the poor man until he is ready to do almost anything to avoid hearing them. There is also a pretty touch of sentiment in the dual love story. My next musical play will be by an American composer. This does not mean that I have lost faith in the Viennese composers, but I find that they are writing more than is wise. In addition to these three new pieces I have in preparation Miss Patsy, a comedy of character by the famous German playwright, Franz Schoenthan. The adaptation is by Sewel Collins. Sweet Gillette is a musical comedy, with score by Gustav Luders, composer of The Prince of Pilsen. The libretto has been adapted from the German of Alexander Engel and Alexander Landesberg by J. Clarence Harvey. Then there is Lady Mortimer, a new play by the well known English author, Major Herbert Woodgate; while I am also planning a revival of the Pixley-Luders musical comedy, The Prince of Pilsen. This will be done with an all-star cast. The musical comedy version of Oliver Herford's witty farce taken from the German, The Florist Shop, is likewise on the list."

Nat Goodwin while in New York recently was rather pessimistic. He thinks there are too many theatres in New York, notwithstanding the fact that other theatrical men, looking forward to still greater growth of the city, have theatres in the course of erection and still others are planned. Dillingham's Globe Theatre in Broadway, near old Long Acre square, now known as Times square, will soon be ready. The Davenport Theatre in Sixty-first street is completed to the second story. The Rialto, which at first embraced that district between Four-

How James O'Neill Got Hold of Monte Cristo

In connection with James O'Neill there is an interesting story of how he came to buy Monte Cristo. He was appearing with Mary Anderson, under the direction of John Stetson, who paid the great actor the flat salary of $25,000 a year. Always a good business man, O'Neill was anxious to strike out for himself. About this time, 1882, Stetson had bought Fechter's Monte Cristo, staged it splendidly, engaged an able cast and sent it out on tour only to find that apparently it was going to be a dead loss. O'Neill had watched the rehearsals and saw his opportunity. Waiting until one day when Stetson was using some of his particularly florid language with reference to the losses Monte Cristo was incurring, O'Neill asked Stetson what he would take for the rights and production. After thinking a moment Stetson asserted that he would be delighted to get rid of the several blankety-blanks show for $2,500. O'Neill accepted on condition that he be released from his contract and given a booking at the Globe Theatre. This rather staggered Stetson, but he finally assented. O'Neill brought in the company, recast it and took it out on a short preliminary tour. Stetson meanwhile watching proceedings and telling him what several kinds of a fool he was. At last the piece was brought to the Globe Theatre and the first week showed a clear profit to O'Neill of $1,300 over all expenses, including the amount he had paid Stetson for the play. Stetson was a good loser and for once acknowledged that his judgment had been mighty wrong.

Bessie Van Ness' Husband Driving Bus

NEW YORK, December 1.—When a pretty and popular young actress like Bessie Van Ness quits the footlights to marry a millionaire's son, like George H. Mulligan Jr., and then finds that the young man has to steer a motor bus on Fifth avenue to keep the wolf from the door, one might expect love to fly out of the window. But Mrs. George H. Mulligan Jr., in the little home at 207 West Eighty-fourth street, where the young couple live with her mother, declared that she was proud of her husband's pluck. She didn't have a word of criticism for the elder Mr. Mulligan, who has turned his son away on account of his marriage. "Oh, yes, it's true," she laughed, "George is driving a bus, and they call him the 'Million Dollar Kid' at the garage, and he doesn't mind it. But I tell him that hard work won't do him a bit of harm. Why in the world should we expect his father to take care of us? We're able to take care of ourselves. We're young and enthusiastic and happy. Of course I want to have a home of my own; and we'll have one, too, as soon as we can save $500. We're going to buy a cottage in Orange. If George would let me I would go back on the stage just long enough to earn that $500. You can understand that this is harder for George than it is for me. He was used to spending $100 a day or more and to the luxuries of his father's house. I never had those things, so I don't miss them. It is possible that my husband's father was angered by a report in one of the papers a few weeks ago, which quoted me as having said I would marry George if his father would cut him off. I wouldn't blame Mr. Mulligan for being angered by such a statement, but I never said it, or anything like it. The day George took me home and introduced me his father was sitting on the veranda. He acted a little queer and I asked him if he would not shake hands with me. He did and then walked away. Then George's sister ordered us both put out of the house. It may be that George's father is giving him a lesson in self-support. When George went to him a few days ago he said: 'If you love your wife so much, why do you not go to work for her?' George offered to work for his father as chauffeur, but Mr. Mulligan refused and told George that when he was his age he was a millionaire." Mrs. Mulligan showed a small trunk containing a few pieces of clothing belonging to her husband. She said that was all that had been sent to him by his family when he asked for his personal effects. Mr. Mulligan Sr. is a millionaire contractor. He has a beautiful home at Morris Plains, N. J. There was a report that he had allowed his son $10 a week and had declared that he should get nothing more until he was 35 years old. But the young man's wife said she don't know of any such plan.

Ringlings to Revive Forepaugh

The Ringling Brothers will have three big tent shows on the road next summer—the Ringling Circus, the Barnaby-Bailey show and the Sells-Forrepaugh enterprise. The aggregation last named was permitted to have a vacation last season, but the circus business in general was so satisfactory that it was determined to revive the old concern. To this and a fine new equipment is being built in Barbadoo, Wis., where the Ringlings have their winter quarters, and the show will start upon its rounds in the spring as spick and span as at its birth. John Ringling is at present in Europe with Mrs. Ringling and Mr. and Mrs. L. N. Scott, of Minneapolis. They have already visited London, Paris and other big cities, and are now about to begin an automobile tour of Southern Germany.

A combination has been effected between the Bentley and the Long Beach theatres and the two San Bernardino theatres, whereby stock companies will alternate between the two cities. The Girton Stock Company closed at the Bentley and goes to San Bernardino for three weeks. The Long Beach Theatre and the Unique at San Bernardino will be devoted to musical comedy and vaudeville.

The Next of Kin

Henry B. Harris produced at the Apollo Theatre in Atlantic City Chas. Klein's latest play, The Next of Kin, before a crowded house. The play is written around the trials of Paula Marsh, whose uncle makes an endeavor to secure her fortune left by her father. In the furtherance of this aim he employs an unscrupulous lawyer, an ex-Judge of the Supreme Court, whose political pull and perverting of law and justice enable him to block every move made by the attorney for the girl. In order to win his case, the unscrupulous lawyer employs every scheme that trickery, knavery and money can make possible. He wins and the uncle is appointed guardian for the girl. She refuses to become a member of her uncle's household and declines to submit to his guardianship. Then the attorney enlists the aid of a physician of uncertain reputation in order to have a commission appointed to inquire into the sanity of the obstreperous niece, and as a result she is incarcerated in a sanitarium. One of the physicians who is on the commission is a doctor enjoying world-wide reputation for honesty and ability. He refuses to be made a party to the nefarious scheme, and after studying the girl's case for days, declares there is nothing more serious than an attack of nervousness, and as a consequence she is released. One of the strong scenes in the play is where, in the second act, the young girl is compelled to undergo a searching and scathing examination before a board of alienists as to whether or not she is capable of handling her own affairs. However strong the grueling, torturous third degree scene in the play of that name was, Mr. Klein has built in The Next of Kin a situation which for tensely has seldom been equaled on the contemporary stage. Here is displayed, absolutely true to life, the process by which many a poor unfortunate has been railroaded to lunatic asylums and other institutions for the feeble minded in order that unscrupulous relatives might, without fear of the law or public contempt, obtain full possession and control of the estates which these poor creatures may own. And, after this examination is over, and while the commission is in another room deliberating in order to arrive at a verdict, the nerve-racking dread of uncertainty is depicted in such a forcible way that the entire audience was enveloped by a wave of sympathy that aroused such a burst of applause and curtain calls as has never been witnessed in a theatre in this city. In The Next of Kin we see the close and sinister connection between certain members of the judiciary in New York and the powerful political influences of an organization like Tammany Hall oppugned. It is a blow struck straight from the shoulder by the iniquity of a political organization which demands tribute from those who seek the nomination for the office of a Justice of the Supreme Court. It also strikes at such corrupt members of the bar who, in summing up their qualifications as lawyers, say: "It makes no difference on which side I am. I win because I have a pull."

After a week at the Byde-a-Wyle Theatre in Long Beach, the Hollingsworth stock gave away to vaudeville.

Hugh J. Emmett

The above is a likeness of the well-known entertainer Hugh J. Emmett, who has appeared in nearly every country where the English language is spoken. Mr. Emmett is assisted by his wife, a most accomplished pianiste and this season they are presenting their latest novelty, An Evening at Home, which is meeting with great favor. Mr. Jack Levy, the strenuous New York agent, represents this capable couple.

Jefferson Compelled To "Try Out"

Thomas Jefferson is firmly convinced that fame is an evanescent, fleeting thing. He is now presenting a condensed version of Rip Van Winkle in vaudeville. Before he went on in Chicago, the house manager insisted on Jefferson's going through a tryout or rehearsal. "Very well," replied the actor, "I'll try out if you wish, but I must warn you in advance that I'm fairly well up in the lines and business, as my grandfather played Rip for 15 years, my father played it for the next 40 years and I've been playing it for the last 10 years. Sure I'll try it out with you."

Hamford Has The Right Idea

"Why did you insist on putting on a modern play, when you were so profitably established as a Shakespearean star?" a manager recently asked of Charles B. Hanford. "Because," answered the eminent player, gravely, "devotion to art should be shown by paying royalties to the living as well as tributes to the dead."

FRED GILBERT has retired from the Burbank Theatre in Los Angeles.

Madame Sembrich Cancels Her Engagements

Salt Lake City, Dec. 10.—With her husband dangerously ill from pneumonia, Madame Sembrich, the prima donna, is speeding across the country today toward Los Angeles in the hope that the less rigorous climate of California will aid in his recovery. She has temporarily canceled all her engagements.

Emma Eames' Confession

Emma Eames, after singing over the country for these past 20 years, and achieving great financial success, leaves the operatic and concert stages, starts on a long pleasure tour of the world, and from the safe vantage ground of Paris waves this frigid sentiment back to us: "I have not opened a music book for many months, I never was really interested in music."

Shocking

I've often seen Miss Anna HELD And seen the lead caress her, But down at Hammerstein's last night I saw Miss Louise DRESSER.

Louis James is to bring his production of Henry the VIII to this city.

Hammerstein Asserts He Is Worth $3,000,000

New York, Dec. 10.—Oscar Hammerstein, at a conference of newspaper men, entered a formal denial to the rumors current here that he is in financial difficulties and that the mortgage on the Manhattan Opera House is about to be foreclosed. During the interview Hammerstein asserted that he is worth $3,000,000 today. He stated that he had no intentions of going "broke" and that his only outstanding indebtedness is a $500,000 mortgage on the big playhouse, which, according to his own assertions, is worth, with the property, $2,000,000 in open market. He said in part: "I am not 'broke' and I don't propose to go 'broke,' no matter who says so, or how often they say it. If any of you can show me a man to whom I owe an unsecured debt, I'll open my books and let you figure it out for yourselves. I am worth $3,000,000 today. I have more in one little corner than is represented in the capitalization of the Metropolitan Opera company. My only floating indebtedness is an account of $9,000 a week for running expenses."

Sam Bernard Wants to be Serious Comedian

Encouraged by the critics and theatre-goers that have commented upon Sam Bernard's touches of pathos in his humorous performance of the venerable diamond merchant in The Girl and the Wizard, at the Casino, that comedian has held a counsel of war with himself and has concluded that when he has finished with his current musical comedy he will embark upon a career as a legitimate star. Like most other men that have made fortunes making people laugh, not forgetting Nat C. Goodwin, Mr. Bernard would give both little fingers to succeed in causing tears to well in the optics of his observers. "Next season, while I am still playing The Girl and the Wizard, on tour," he says, "I shall 'try out' a series of comedies without music at special matinees. To this end I shall make a business of reading manuscripts industriously for the next year, and when I find a piece of apparent value I shall ask the author for permission to give it at least one or two trial performances on the road."

The Chocolate Soldier

The Chocolate Soldier may safely be called one of the big successes of the present New York season. No play has been shifted twice in recent years and survived the operation, yet the interesting military man at the Lyric Theatre has been playing checkers up and down Broadway without being harmed. The Whitney production has proved, too, that New York likes good music and clean wit. There are more laughs to the minute in The Chocolate Soldier than in most of the shows in that town, and they are the result of bright lines and situations rather than of slapsticks or the murdering of the King's English. Of the music much can be written in praise.

MR. AND MRS. JOSEPH BROOKS and Sandy Dingwall will be in Los Angeles next week.

Portland Is Having An Unusually Busy Theatrical Week

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 13.—BUNGALOW—(Calvin Heilig, mgr., William Pangle, res. mgr.)—The Man of the Hour is back with us again, I think this is the third visit, and last night at its opening it packed this theatre again. The story deals so truly with American life, that it hits home to the average theatre-goer with such force that it usually succeeds in bringing the person who has witnessed the play to the theatre a second time to see it. The story is sound and wholesome, and enough laughs are intermingled to keep one's interest to the top notch at all times. John Moore and Felix Haney carried off the honors in the present production of the play. Haney is again playing the alderman's role, and Moore is the political boss. The men members of the company left nothing to be desired, but as much cannot be said of the ladies. Coming: Ezra Kendall, 16. George Cohan is an early booking. BAKER—(George L. Baker, mgr., Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Two audiences, matinee and evening, that packed this theatre to the doors and left standing room at a premium, were in attendance at this house yesterday, at the return engagement of The Land of Nod. And everyone who saw the play and players left the theatre with a feeling that they got full value for the money invested. Anna McNabb and Neil McNeill, last season with The Red Mill, are prominently identified with this season's company, and both made hits from their first step on the stage. Another improvement in the present company is in the role of Welsh Rarebit, played by E. D. Coe. Bessie Lee Merrill is the principal vocalist with the company, and proved to have a sweet voice. The company is a large one and the chorus is well drilled. Next week: The Girl at the Helm. PORTLAND—(Russell & Drew, mgrs.)—This house reopens 19th with The Gay Musician. ORPHEUM—(John F. Cordray, mgr.)—A distinctly entertaining bill was offered at this theatre the past week, and novelty was not lacking in any manner. Edwina Barry and her company, The Home Breaker, was the headliner, and the skit was interesting and did not lag at any stage. The Potter-Hartwells troupe of tumblers and comedians kept the audiences in a jovial mood, while The Two Coleys & Fay, in a black face act, got their share of applause and laughter. This week's bill includes Alice Lloyd as a headline act, and also The McNaughtons, Perman Brothers, Cross & Josephine, La Toska, Canstant Arkansas, and Joe Garza. LYRIC—(Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—Another hit must be credited to the Athon Stock Company in their production of Mr. Potter of Texas yesterday. They were all well up in their lines, and the management have left nothing undone to make the production a notable one. Mr. Athon played the part of the cattle king, Potter, faithfully, and Priscilla Knowles, in the heroine's role, did herself justice. Dorothy Davis and Alice Condon are entitled to words of commendation for their delineation of the parts assigned to them. Sidney Payne was entrusted with the comedy role and was equal to demands that the role made upon him, as did Ed. Lawrence, George Walling and Jack Bennett. GRAND—(Frank Coffinberry, mgr.)—For this week the following acts are offered: Delmore & Lee; Long & Cotton; Whitehead & Grierson; Wilson & DeMondeville; Jimmy Wall; Kathleen DeVoie, and Fred Bauer. PANTAGES—(John Johnson, mgr.)—This week's bill includes Florenz Troupe; Four American Gipsy Girls; Schrodos & Chappell; Nip & Tuck; Howard & Lewis; Mlle. Viscaya, and Leo White.

CARSON CITY, Dec. 14.—LAKE (Hayes & Murray, props. and mgrs.)—Amateur night Wednesday night and large crowd in attendance despite heavy storm. Four reels of interesting films, two pleasing songs by Carson's favorite singer, "Babe" Whitaker, and a screaming, funny farce by four young lads, Wesley Riehl, Phil Malo, Joe Allerton and Joe Cowden. Young Malo has a good singing voice which should be cultivated.

Reno, Nevada, has a greater proportion of good amateur actors and actresses to its population than perhaps any other town of its size on the Coast. Friday evening an amateur company from the Riverside town descended upon Carson City and gave The Princess Bonnie to a packed house, a house full of enthusiasm and appreciation. The musical comedy was directed by John Reber, who is master of his profession as was demonstrated by the precision of the drills and fancy dancing as well as by the interpretation of the various roles.

The leading character was sung by Mrs. Elizabeth Stoddart, to whose magnificent voice was added a dramatic fire that made the character a delightful and interesting one. Her solos received vociferous applause and the duo with H. Gulling, which was a tempestuous one, was repeatedly encored. Miss Madge McMillan was a veritable Kitty Clover, a summer girl and belle of the seaside town, and, in addition to a clear, admirably controlled soprano, she possesses a trim, graceful figure and a dainty, piquant face that caught the fancy of every one present. Her rendition of Whisper Words of Love, assisted by the Spanish students, was a brilliant piece of acting and was applauded to the echo. Herbert Linden's delightful tenor was heard to excellent advantage in solos, duets and even in the chorus, which was one of the best heard in Carson for many a day, it was manifest above all the rest. Charles Sadlier, the well known hotel man of Reno, furnished a fund of amusement as the old fisherman and A. T. Archer was a typical captain of the life saving crew. August Froelich is not much of an actor, but he can sing "mighty well," and his songs were highly enjoyed. Miss Woodsmall's rich contralto was heard to advantage in the role of Auntie Crabb, and Miss Brace made all there was to be made of the character of Donna Pomposo. Jack O'Sullivan, brother of the late Dennis O'Sullivan, played the comedy role of Shrimps in the Reno production, but when it was found that he could not accompany

Terkelson & Henry

For many years it has been generally acknowledged that San Francisco photographers are the cleverest this country has known. When it comes to general portraiture, Terkelson & Henry, the local firm, stand out boldly for excellence, reliability and courtesy. Their studio at 1220 Market street, opposite Eighth street, is superbly equipped. These two enterprising, energetic young men have a reputation from coast to coast. They personally attend to all settings and are extremely particular in regard to the quality of every photograph they turn out. Special attention is given to theatrical work. In fact, this firm is so well known in New York that many large companies coming out to the Coast wait to get to San Francisco before placing large orders for frames and newspaper photographs. Every big star and person of note coming to San Francisco has been photographed by Terkelson & Henry. They make a specialty of life size work and in this practically undeveloped branch of photography they have accomplished wonders. One of their first achievements along this line is a life size picture of George M. Cohan, just completed, which has won the enthusiastic approval of that young genius. The studio is open Sundays from 10 to 5. Special appointments can be made for after hours.

the troupe to Carson City, Harry Watson of Grass Valley was wired for and arrived just in time to board the special bound for Carson City. In spite of the fact that he was compelled to appear without a rehearsal and that the young lady playing the opposite was a total stranger to him, he acquitted himself nobly, being eminently fitted for the role. Every movement was ludicrous and he was as limber as a contortionist, calling forth repeated applause from the audience. T. Gibson made a comical Salvador, the admiral's body guard, and was as black as a sunburned Ethiopian. The following were members of the choruses and added greatly to the general success of the affair: Ladies—H. White, L. White, Louise Cann, Mrs. Valentine, Alice Young, May Curnow, E. Norton, Pearle Marcelle, Freda Hilp, Miss Marcelle, Mildred Wheeler, Wanda Cooper, Alma McNeilly, C. Sheldon, D. Sheldon, D. Singer, Marion Brush, Vivian Heydenfeldt. Men—Howard R. Ward, Percy Walker, George Johnson, Harold Taylor, Stow Heydenfeldt, James Holesworth, Ralph Dignowity, Tom Gibson, Ernest Folsom, Dudley Homer, Dan Hart, Charles Rush, Otto Hushman, Captain Badger, Jesse Crow, Fred Dignowity, Ernest Damon, S. S. Smith. After the performance was over the company was taken to the Sagebrush Club rooms, where a dainty luncheon awaited them and the time was passed merrily until time for the special train to take them to Reno whistled for them to make haste.

A. H. M.

It cost Robert McDowell, an actor with The Three Twins Company, about $20 to settle a 50 cents room bill in Visalia. When the company showed here McDowell engaged a room at a local lodging house, but did not use it. Neither did he send around word that he had made different arrangements, nor did he send the price. M. S. Featherstone, proprietor of the place, swore out a warrant for his arrest. The company was then in Bakersfield. Constable Newman went to Bakersfield to get his man. He found him, but the management of the show paid the bill and costs, amounting to nearly $20.

James J. McCloskey, Old-Timer, Says the Present-Day Actor is a Bad Actor and that His Attempts Are Tame

According to James J. McCloskey, old-time actor and playwright, there aren't many actors nowadays. Also the New Theatre up in Central Park West, New York, is really quite a nice little theatre. In addition, Mr. E. H. Sothorn seems to be a well meaning young man who should have been born seventy years ago, when the conditions were such that he might have learned how to act. And although as it is he and Miss Marlowe don't do so very badly, still you all should have dropped around to the old Broadway Theatre at Broadway and Worth streets in 1859 and seen Mr. McCloskey and Edward E. Eddy and Mme. Ponisi and Harry Pierson and Alice Grey and a few others do Antony and Cleopatra as it ought to be done and as—take it from Mr. McCloskey—it will never be done again.

Mr. McCloskey has been off the stage now for thirty years, but speaks with the authority of one who has acted with Booth, McCullough, Forest and a host of other notables. He is eighty-three years old and lives entirely surrounded by antique play-bills in a fine house in Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn. He acted in California, Australia, Hawaii and New Zealand ten years before the civil war broke out, and he now attends the theatre regularly, but, as he says, and sighs, with an enthusiasm abated by time.

Anyway, he played with Eddy and Mme. Ponisi in Antony and Cleopatra in 1859 and has views on the play as it has been revived.

"I went up to this New Theatre the opening night," he said recently, "and between the acts I wept a little. I had expected that at least the ideal theatre was actually with us, but I can't see that their pretty New Theatre fills the part.

"It was just a piece of Broadway moved a little ways up town. The audience was more clothes than appreciation. Enthusiasm was an absentee and the acting was tame. In addition, the piece wasn't put on as if there was tons of money behind it, like they say there is, and—well, I couldn't get a thrill out of it. I went home feeling as though I'd seen a proper little performance given in a Harlem flat where the performers were afraid they'd wake the people's babies in the flat down stairs, and as I rode back to Brooklyn I couldn't help but think how Ed. Eddy would have made the rafters hum and how Mme. Ponisi would have made those people stand on their chairs.

"When we played Antony and Cleopatra at the old Broadway, we had stage effects that were stage effects. In the first place we used a version of the play that made the action fast and brought out all the drama there was in the piece, and every man and woman in the cast was a star, if I do say it myself. But more than anything else we had the thing put on the stage the way it wants to be.

"You ought to have seen our Nile scene with Cleopatra's barge moving down the river, the slaves fanning her and the Pyramids rearing their ghostly bulk along the shore. There was realism for you! There was suggestion, romance, poetry, everything that people expect for their money and don't get any more. Why, before we presented that piece we rehearsed it four months. That, in a time when actors used to get sore if they were asked to rehearse anything more than twice before an opening performance! And they were entitled to be sore, too. Two rehearsals were plenty for any actor that knew his business those days. Those were the days of versatility and of versatilitarians.

Mourns Old School.

"What's become of that school now? Dead as a door nail, defunct as the Cardiff Giant, extinct as the dodo, irresuscitable as John Brown's body. Show me the actor of today who could fall down stairs or off his horse in the afternoon and get out and do his little Hamlet that same night! Could little 'Willie' Faversham do it? Could our friend, James K. Hackett do it? Could our friend, E. H. Sothorn, do it? No, not one of them could do it. But I did it and everybody that worked in my time had to do it, or get out of the profession.

"Let me tell you, in case you think that about falling down stairs or off a horse is a joke. At the time we were rehearsing Antony and Cleopatra I was playing Dick Turpin in Rookwood in the same old Broadway. In the first act, a few minutes after I came on, I had to fight three villains all the way down a flight of stairs at right stage, kill all three before I got halfway down, and then fall the rest of the way down, weak from loss of blood. And it had to be a natural fall, too, or I'd have got mine from the gallery and pit. In the last act of the same play, my horse, Black Bess, dies of a broken heart and, as she collapsed at the footlights—she was a trained horse that did it as natural as life—I had to fall off her and take my chances of her rolling on me. I used to get a hundred a week for the part—sixty for the ability to act it and forty for risking my neck. And as often as not we'd give Rookwood in the afternoon and one of the Shakespearean pieces the same night.

"Take it another way. I've done character parts with George Fox's company in the Bowery one week, taken off Irishmen and Dutchmen and plantation negroes and what not, and the next week I'd be Iago or Othello or Julius Caesar or some other heavyweight, and have to be as good an Othello as I'd been a Dutchman or t'other way about.

"And I'm putting my own case just because it's more familiar to me than other men's cases, and not because I care a hang after thirty years whether people think I ever could act or not. The point I'm trying to make is that you could comb the American stage today from end to end and you couldn't find a man who could play half a dozen parts the same week."

Discourses on Hamlet.

Like most veteran actors, Mr. McCloskey has views on the part of Hamlet should be played and was glad to give them yesterday.

"The trouble with most earnest young men who attempt Hamlet," he said, "is that they make too many motions. They strain at gnats instead of playing Hamlet as though he were a human being. The part of Hamlet amounts to nothing more nor less than a command of all the trick work known to the stage. The one man I know who could play it to perfection was a little fellow named 'Eddie' Raynor, an Englishman who died several years ago without ever becoming what they call 'great' in the business today. He was past master of every trick and quirk and mannerism you ever heard of, and he had borrowed them all from the different actors of the time. He just went through the part, turning off one effective trick after another, and everybody took it for subtlety, while 'Eddie' laughed in his sleeve. He knew what he was about. He saw through it that Shakespeare wrote the play because the people of Shakespeare's time were getting tired of straightaway stuff and wanted a little mystery stuff, and he gave it to them.

"If Shakespeare were alive today he wouldn't be able to explain his own Hamlet to save his life. 'Eddie' Raynor was a great Hamlet because he didn't try to take the part too seriously. He had gropped Shakespeare's idea and he let his audiences have it that way, and the audiences were happy because they thought they were getting something deep. However, to get back to this New Theatre performance of Antony and Cleopatra again—well, never mind. What's the use?"

The Western Play

That dramatic production of uncertain realization, the great American play, a thing for which managers, actors and the general public have all been waiting for these many years, is still well within the nebula of the intangible, distant future. That there is such a thing as an American play, however, that is capable of reflecting American life, feeling and ideals, and whose technical perfection is comparable to the best that European culture can produce, is now beyond cavil.

The time has gone by when those venerable and respected, though obviously crude dramas, Uncle Tom's Cabin and Ten Nights in a Barroom, represents the best products of our native writers for the stage.

In his thoughtful book, The Playhouse and the Stage, Percy Mackaye points out that the drama of the new world has of necessity been crude and unformed because of its environment. In the old world the various media for expressing life in terms of art have existed and continued uninterrupted for centuries. Here men have been forced from the very nature of things to deal so entirely with the concrete that they have had no time to develop artistically. It is only now that we, as a people, are beginning to find ourselves, artistically. Clearing forests and building cities leaves little time to devote to the more subtle expressions of life, save in an attempt to find amusement in them.

Such plays as The Witching Hour, Salvation Nell and The Lion and the Mouse indicate that we are experiencing a change in this respect. True, the love interest is still dominant, in fact, the one theme of the theatrical productions in the United States. But that we have found out that such an interest is capable of dramatic technique of the highest order is a decided step in advance of what most of us can easily remember.

It is interesting to note, however, that as yet the West has received comparatively little attention from the dramatists. It is true that such plays as Arizona, The Rose of the Rancho and The Girl of the Golden West and The Virginian have proved themselves to be wonderfully successful year in and year out. Even so, such bills as these represent but a small part of the life of the great empire that lies between the Mississippi and the Pacific.

While such plays undoubtedly have merit they follow the dramatic fashions. There are styles in plays just as there are in hats, cravats and automobiles. Just now to write a play that the average manager is not afraid of and the average audience knows is Western, it must be filled with gun plays, "chaps," strange oaths and the picturesque dialogue, the like of which was never heard on sea and land, and which passes for the customary mutual discourse in the land where the sun goes down.

The great West has its vexing questions. The people of the Pacific Slope have their problems to meet—problems which are peculiarly their own, yet which are intimately related to the great movement of American development. There is an abundant field here for the dramatist. The harvest is white. It is a mine that has been but superficially touched. Some time some one, with the courage of his convictions, one great enough to see the possibilities that are before him, will depict in form suitable for the stage the everyday life about us. It may deal with the plains, or it may deal with the life of the growing cities of the far West. Such a writer will neither consider nor care whether he is writing after the designs of the dramatic fashion plates, but that writer and that play will not only reveal us to ourselves and to the world, but he and the child of his brain will take permanent places high in the annals of the American drama.

Olga Nethersole has a new and brilliantly successful play, The Writing on the Wall, which deals with the Trinity corporation affairs in connection with the slum properties.

The front of the new Columbia

Theatre is unquestionably one of the most beautiful works of the builders' art now existing in San Francisco, and is regarded as the finest of any theatre in America. The interior is rapidly shaping into completion.

Tacoma Has a Plentiful Supply of Theatrical Talent

TACOMA, Dec. 11.—In Dreamland was the attraction at the Tacoma Theatre Dec. 1. The play was a poor one and drew a small audience. Dec. 3 a large and fashionable audience greeted Fritz Kreisler, who gave a highly enjoyable violin recital. The next attraction in the artists' course will be Mme. Sembrich, who appears here Jan. 4. The Third Degree played here Dec. 4 and 5 and returned Dec. 8. The play made a great impression and was liberally patronized. The splendid work of Miss Eliscu established her as a favorite, and Paul Everson's admirers, who are many here, greeted him warmly. The supporting company was an excellent one and the piece splendidly staged. The Traveling Salesman returned here today doing a good business afternoon and evening. Coming—Dec. 12-13, A Girl at the Helm; Dec. 14-15, Ezra Kendall; Dec. 18-19, The Man of the Hour. Agnes Quinn of this city, who has been studying for the operatic stage, has entered into a contract with Mr. Demachchi, an operatic coach, for a ten weeks' tour of Italy in grand opera work. During her engagement in Tacoma last season Marie Doro and her manager, Charles Frohman, heard Miss Quinn in private recital and interested themselves in her behalf. Cards have been received here announcing the marriage of Fay Fairchild of this city to Frank L. Valant of New York City. Miss Fairchild has been appearing for the past two seasons in The Love Cure. The Tacoma Lodge of Elks held their annual Lodge of Sorrow at the Tacoma Theatre Saturday afternoon Dec. 5. The memorial address was delivered by Rev. A. C. Grier of Spokane, and the eulogy by Rev. M. A. Matthews of Seattle. A prominent feature of the service was a splendid program of vocal music. Last week at the Grand Theatre Myrtle Byrne had a novel and unique shooting act. The Nat Nazarro Co. proved to be good acrobats. The Bohemian Sextette sang well. George Wilson and Camille Demondville in a German farce, and Gertrude Everett, a character comedienne who sang comical songs, proved laugh getters. George F. Keane continues to please as the singer of illustrated songs. This week the aerial ladder novelty of Delmore and Lee is a big attraction. Joe Whitehead and Flo Grierson from The Empire Company established themselves as favorites. The Three Keltons are always welcome visitors to Tacoma. Nick Long and Idalene Cotton who appeared here six years ago in The Prince of Pilsen act well in a melodramatic sketch. Jimmy Wall in black face was as amusing as ever. Kathleen De Voir proved a passable dancer. At the Pantages an enjoyable feature was the singing of Fisher Burkhardt. Fisher, who composed My Brudder Sylvest, If the Man in the Moon Were a Coon, and many more, sang his own compositions. The Tyrolean Sextette, besides their singing, offered a novel national dance. The Three Lucifers had an athletic act. Moore and St. Clair, some funny conversation, and Mme. Emeric a trapeze act. Crenzon was good in his ventriloquism. Margaret Bell is a new singer of illustrated songs at Pantages. The Florenz Family are always a big drawing card, but Tacoma Florenz is the center of the attraction at present. Born in Tacoma not quite two years ago while her parents were filling an engagement, the little miss was named for the city of her birth. Schrodos and Chappell have a lively act, full of jokes. A quartette of gypsy girls sang unusually well. Howard and Lewis also offered a singing number. Mlle. Viscaya is a violinist of fair ability, and Biff and Bang an acrobatic act that was comical. A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to the REVIEW. A. H.

That Old Cafe

I sat in an old cafe tonight,
Where often, long ago,
Under the softly shaded light
The music whispered low.

We built our castles in the air,
Happy, careless and free;
Ah, but the future looked so fair,
So bright to you and me.

The "Dago red" seemed a rare champagne
At that old-table d'hote,
For love was king and we banished pain.
You sang, and I—I wrote.

Wrote foolish verses, plays and • things.
Sweeter than fame or gold,
The smile you gave through soft smoke rings
In the dream days of old.

We talked of music, drama and art
In our wise youthful way,
And you were to be my own sweetheart
When I'd won fame, some day.

But days of our dreaming soon passed by,
And each went his way alone;
For brightest hopes fade—I wonder why—
I sit here tonight, my own

And think of the years that have gone since then,
Life's struggles, the loss and gain.
Ah, girl, could we but bring them back again,
Lay down this burden of pain.

For life is so short, dear, after all,
And love is its fairest day,
I'd give all the world to find once more
Youth's dreams in that old cafe.
—Ernest Wilkes, New York, Nov. '09.

Strenuous Coast Tour of The Three Twins

"Something doing every minute" could have been written down in the diary of most of the members of The Three Twins Company which has been touring the Coast, for they have been up against everything from romance to tragedy, such as a wedding, a threatened murder, a romance which involves beautiful Bessie Clifford, the female star of the company, who has won the persistent attentions of John Cudahy, Jr., the famous Omaha youth who was kidnapped by Pat Crowe in Omaha several years ago, and who is just now giving Southern California a touch of high life, as a millionaire's son understands it. Whether he had known Bessie Clifford before does not appear, but young Cudahy was her devoted follower in Southern California. The final touch to the variety was the death of a chorus girl's mother in Oakland last week. Fred Hodgdon Whittier, musician, and Ada Maud Shiers, chorus girl, were married in San Bernardino last week by Justice of the Peace C. L. Thomas in the township court. The ceremony was witnessed by a large number of the company, who wound up the nuptials with a shower of rice and vegetables. Whittier is 24, and his petite bride 21. He hails from Montpelier, Vt., and she from New York City. The near tragedy in this chronicle of excitement was brought to light when the manager of the show applied to Sheriff Ralphs for protection for one of his chorus girls from another member of the company, who insisted that the girl marry him, and threatened her life if she refused. Altogether, The Three Twins have been having a lovely time.

Forty-five Minutes From Broadway

Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway, Geo. M. Cohan's musical production, opens at the Savoy Theatre on Sunday next. Plain Mary needs no introduction to San Francisco. She is a favorite everywhere, presenting a human characterization that has always appealed. In the hands of Elizabeth Drew this plain, loyal-hearted domestic has been pronounced wonderfully pathetic and convincing. Kid Burns, with his wonderfully expressive slang phrases, is another character that has and shall always make an immense hit. Charley Brown as the Kid has been received with open arms all over the country, and has been described by critics as a worthy successor to Geo. M. Cohan's best star. With the exception of Charles Brown and Elizabeth Drew the original company comes here. Besides dramatic, pathetic and fine stage effect, this production has some of the best song hits of the decade. Mary Is a Grand Old Name, So Long, Mary, Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway, are but three that have been taken home by the popular fancy. The story of the piece is an amusing recital of the doings of New York suburbanites, with a plot that develops interestingly, and has been called Cohan's best effort in the line of playwriting. The cast includes Charley Brown, Elizabeth Drew, Ninon Ristori, Louise Gardner, Joseph Kauffman, Susan Chisnell, James H. Manning, James A. Davett, Harry Gwynette and others. New Rochelle, which is just forty-five minutes from Broadway, is a typical "small town." Geo. M. Cohan has drawn his characters with great truthness to life and has cleverly interwoven comedy, drama, burlesque, melodrama and musical comedy in his interesting story of suburban life.

Books In Cave To Show Bacon Was Dramatist

Boston, Dec. 12.—Following the minute directions of a cipher of Lord Bacon's writings, which seems to establish beyond doubt the authenticity of Bacon's claim to the authorship of plays and histories that will change the entire character of English literary history, a party of Boston men and women, all noted for their learning and high social position, is now near the spot where Bacon's literary and original manuscripts are buried, and a cable may at any moment flash the confirmation of their discovery to a waiting world. In this party are Dr. Orville W. Iwen of Detroit, a famous Baconian scholar; Dr. W. S. Prescott and John Dane of Boston, Mrs. Prescott and Mrs. M. L. Belcher, widely known in this city and Brookline. Already by following the instructions of the cipher the party is in England and has found the secret chamber in Bacon's castle which, according to the cipher, leads directly to the river, thence to the cliff where Bacon's entire library, consisting of manuscripts and books, has been concealed from the world for nearly 300 years. So minute were the directions and so identical were the surroundings that the party found the "wasp hill" mentioned by Bacon, and everything exactly as described in the scholar's writings. In a cave on the side of this hill and bordering on the river they found the ledge on the face of a cliff, accessible only at certain sides. The cave, oak tree, cliff and other landmarks told of in the cipher were found to be correct. From a literary standpoint what is considered to be the most important result of this discovery is the expected establishing of Bacon's claim to the authorship of the Shakespeare plays and to much of the writings of Robert Greene, George Peele, Christopher Marlowe's plays, Edmund Spenser's Fairy Queen, Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy and other important historical and literary masterpieces. The party expects to find buried in the cave Bacon's library, and that it will prove that Queen Elizabeth, known as the virgin queen, was a much married woman, that Bacon was her son and that he had a brother in John Dudley, the earl of Essex, who was ordered to be put to death by his mother for daring to claim his birth-right.

Lulu Glaser In One of The Boys

Lulu Glaser has begun rehearsals in New York of a new comedy with music, entitled One of the Boys, in which she will open out-of-town at the earliest possible date preparatory to her annual New York engagement on Broadway. One of the Boys is by Rida Johnson Young, author of Brown of Harvard and The Lottery Man. The stellar character in One of the Boys, played, of course, by Miss Glaser, is that of a young girl brought up in a Michigan lumber camp, who comes to a "finishing school" in New York to get educational and social polish. She has a number of the amusing adventures which Miss Glaser knows so well how to make especially laughable, and also meets her "fate" in the metropolis.

Bianci

Bianci is a dancer, who, in addition to making her vocation a profession, also makes it an art. Among the dancers who have appeared in S. F. made a more decided hit than has made a more decided hit that has this talented little woman. Her act, which was a top liner at the Orpheum when she was here, and was given more space on the bill boards than is usual to the big attractions at this popular house. The publicity given Bianci was warranted, however, for every writer in the city, in noticing her turn, spoke of it in terms that were most unqualified. She dresses her act with that same taste and care that characterizes everything she does. There is not the minutest detail that she overlooks. She is not a woman who gives the same step in every dance she puts on. In her turn, half a dozen dances are introduced, and so distinct is the differentiation Bianci makes, that it is difficult to believe the same woman presents each rhythmic characterization. This artist is a woman of personality, and those who were fortunate enough to meet her off the stage found her to have a wit as nimble as her dainty feet. She is well read outside of her profession, and applies her general education with most profitable results, as any one will testify who saw her when she made her sensation at the Orpheum.

Los Angeles Treasurers Fighting Intruding Organization

The treasurers of the Los Angeles theatres who achieved such a magnificent success with their first annual dance, last year, have lately been offered opposition by a rival club, and to put a strangle hold on the newcomer, the old organization got together the other night and issued the following statement:

"In order to correct an impression prevalent among our friends and the general public, we wish to make the following statement:

"On Friday morning, December 10, an article appeared in the columns of the "Examiner," stating the fact that there had been organized a new Theatrical Treasurers' Association, and that they had filed incorporation papers. The statement was also made that the name of the association of which Joseph Montrose is the head, had been assimilated by the new organization. Further, it was said, under the auspices of this new association a ball was to be given at a date prior to the one selected by the original organization. We wish to state that the newer organization has not received any articles of incorporation and are not in any way entitled to use the name of the Theatrical Treasurers' Association, of which we were the original founders a year ago, and which we are endeavoring to uphold. Knowing the immense success of our last professional ball, this new club not only seeks to appropriate our association name, but have secured a date just one week earlier than that upon which we had decided for our next function. The Theatrical Treasurers' Association which was founded a year ago still embraces the original founders, namely, George M. Clayton, treasurer of the Belasco Theatre; Ira Joseph, assistant treasurer; William H. Ervast, treasurer of the Burbank Theatre, George Baudrand, assistant treasurer; Arthur Dentier, assistant treasurer Orpheum Theatre; Ralph Lamme, assistant treasurer Majestic Theatre; Joseph Montrose, treasurer. The second annual grand professional ball at Goldberg-Bosley assembly rooms will be given under the auspices of the above named members, Friday evening, January 14, for which every arrangement has already been consummated. Dick Ferris and Florence Stone have consented to lead the grand march, while Harry Girard will assume complete directorship of the entertainment portion of the program between dances. We have secured the services of J. N. Laraia, musical director of the Burbank Theatre, who will wield the baton over thirty selected musicians. It has been promised that all the stage favorites who contributed so largely to the success of our last ball will participate, and in addition to these arrangements a wire was received from the management of the King Dodo Comic Opera Company, due at the Majestic Theatre that week, assuring us of their complete support. Los Angeles favorites who will attend upon the evening of the fourteenth will comprise Blanche Hall, Thais Magrane, Frances Nordstrom, Adele Farrington, Lovel Alice Taylor, Grace Gardner, Ethel Von Waldron, Beth Taylor, Margo Duffet, Florence Oberle, Fay Bainter, Louise Royce, Ida

Johnny Williams, "Frisco"

The agent that knows all countries, having had the pleasure of being in advance in the past of Charles Frohmann, the late Hermann, great magician, Walter Main and Ringling Bros.' Circus, and other high class attractions; truly the write man in the right place.

Camp, David Hartford, William Yerrance, David Landau, Howard Scott, Harry Mestayer, Richard Vivian, Henry Stockbridge, Charley Ruggles, John Burton, Harry Andrews, H. S. Duffield, James K. Applebee, Frederick Gilbert, Harry Spear, Gavin Young, Charles Gyblyn, Victor Scherzinger, Fanchon Lewis, Fanchon Everhart, Norman Heap and a number of others. There will be two hundred dollars in prize cups which will occupy the window of the Whitley Jewelry Company two weeks prior to the date of the ball. The judges of the prize dances will be Julian Johnson, John H. Blackwood, Herbert Blake, Oliver Morosco and Edward Graham. There will be thirty-two dances in addition to the concert program. Dancing will begin at nine and the grand march, led by Dick Ferris and Florence Stone, will occur promptly at midnight.

"Very respectfully yours, Geo. M. Clayton, Ralph Lamme, George Baudrand, Ira Joseph, Arthur R. Dentler, William H. Ervast, Joseph Montrose."

Notable Players

The publishers of the "New York Clipper" announce that they have in preparation a series of articles on "Notable Players of the Past and Present," beginning with Edwin Forrest and continuing down to the present time. These articles will give the professional career of all the notable stars in the profession, mentioning the important plays in which they have appeared, etc., and when completed will make a record which will be valuable and interesting to all persons interested in theatricals both in and out of the profession. The first installment will appear in the issue dated January 1, 1910.

The Newman-Foltz Co. open in stock in Long Beach on December 25th.

ONE OF THE GREATEST SUCCESSES OF THE YEAR

The Man From Home

After a record-breaking New York and Chicago run, Liebler & Co. have sent The Man from Home to tour the country. The play will be seen here at the Valencia Theatre for the holiday season, commencing Sunday night. It comes not alone with the endorsement of Chicago, New York and the larger cities, but each place where it has been played the chorus of praise has swept far ahead, the genuineness of its excellence. It is a play of the people and essentially a play of the great Middle West. Father and the boys, mother and the girls, can alike enjoy its humor, sentiment and kindly satire. It vibrates Americanism; that tells its whole story of success. Secondly, its tense interest revolves around the adventures of two rich young Americans, brother and sister, from Kokomo, Ind., who are sought to be ensnared into foreign marriages with persons of title for the golden shower they would cause to rain into depleted exchequers. American horse sense and American manliness of sentiment in the person of Daniel Voorhees Pike, Esq., attorney-at-law, comes to the rescue. He crosses the ocean to Sorrento, Italy, where the conspiracy is under full sway in the very nick of time, and then and there are happenings such as would be expected from a man and a lover of the real American type. The play is in four acts, the complete scenic equipment of which the Liebler Company carry intact.

Spotlights

A few well known men in the theatrical world, who are stopping with Manager Shanley of the Continental Hotel on Ellis Street, at the present time, are: Teddy Leary, ahead of Fritzie Scheff; John Harley, ahead of The Man from Home Co.; Harry Davidson, ahead of Ezra Kendall Co.; Chas. A. Goetteler, manager King Dodo Co.; Billie Friend, the real King

Francis D. McGinn

Mr. McGinn, he of the dramatic heritage of the West, is still pleasing the exacting Eastern cities. After a most successful year with Via Wireless, Mr. McGinn was switched by his manager, Frederic Thompson, to Polly of the Circus, in which play he is portraying Big Jim, the boss canvassman. His success in the part has been notable. Mr. McGinn combines great power with the finest technic and his services are very much in demand.

Dodo; Eddy Cort, treasurer of the New Savoy Theatre; Chas. Dow Clark of the Alcazar Stock Company.

David Warfield has just concluded his first tour of the south. His production of The Music Master is as big a card this year as when it was first staged.

A score of real Indians are used in the battle scene of The Round Up, which Klaw & Erlanger are to send here shortly after the first of the year. The canyon scenes is said to be the most realistic stage picture ever shown in this country. The ride of the Indians over the precipices evokes great enthusiasm at every performance.

Next Week's Offerings at San Francisco Theatres

The Orpheum

The Orpheum Road Show, always the most delightful vaudeville incident of the holiday season, will begin its annual engagement in this city this Sunday matinee. The headliner honors will be divided between La Titcomb, the singer on horseback, and Ida O'Day. La Titcomb is a beautiful American girl who created an immense sensation in Europe. Arranged in a white tight-fitting costume cut a la directoire and mounted on a magnificent white Arabian steed she gives a clever exhibition of high school riding. Her act also includes singing and serpentine dancing.

Miss O'Day, a clever young actress who of late has greatly distinguished herself in several important Frohman productions, will appear as Saucers in Mrs. Oscar Berringer's one-act play, A Bit of Old Chelsea, which Mrs. Fiske made so famous.

A Night in a Monkey Music Hall, presented by Maud Rochez, is making one of the greatest hits ever known in vaudeville. It consists of an entire vaudeville performance, orchestra included, given by monkeys. The ape who appears as the Maestro is said to be a wonderful actor.

Mae Melville and Robert Higgins, two capital comedians, will indulge in a skit which they call Just a Little fun.

Hyman Meyer, "The Man at the Piano," who won great popularity a year ago, will let loose a musical monologue, and Fay, Two Coleys and Fay will introduce a black faced act called The Minstrels.

With this programme, Carl Nobel, "The Scandinavian Ventriloquist," Harry Fox and Millership Sisters will close their engagement.

Valencia Theatre

The last performance of The Gay Musician will take place this Saturday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday night Liebler & Company's production of The Man from Home will begin a two weeks' engagement. The Man from Home will in no wise fall below the standard set by its predecessors. The company is headed by Henry Hall, who plays the leading role and includes such an army of artists as Charles D. Herman, so long featured in the Warde-James Shakespearean productions; Harrington Reynolds, prominent here in the support of Nat C. Goodwin and T. Daniel Fawley, and acknowledged one of the most capable interpreters of roles requiring carriage, dignity and pose; Mary Elizabeth Forbes, Harrison Fisher's famous poster girl, and who was last seen here with Lillian Russell in Wildfire; Bertha Welby, one of the most famous of American actresses; Mary Moffort, Leonard Howe, Vaughan Trevor, Albert Roccardi, lingual comedian with John Drew for a term of years; John Martin, Harry Brewster and a group of other Broadway favorites. The Man from Home, as characteristic of all Liebler & Co.'s shows, carries its own scenic equipment complete, and the comedy will be presented here with the every attention to detail which marked its tremendous three year's run in New York and Chicago. The only matinee performance of The Man from Home will be given on Christmas and New Years.

Alcazar Theatre

A play replete with human interest and thrilling situations is Pierre of the Plains, which will be given its first presentation in California next Monday evening and throughout the week at the Alcazar. Edgar Selwyn adapted it from Sir Gilbert Parker's widely-read novel of the Canadian border, Pierre and His People, and it ran one season in the Hudson Theatre, New York, and another on the road. Pierre, the son of an Indian mother and a white father, is a professional gambler, and when the play opens he is in love with Jen Galbraith, the pretty daughter of a road-house keeper. Her young brother has killed an Indian in a quarrel and is endeavoring to cross the boundary line into Montana, where the dreaded Northwestern police cannot follow him. The girl is loved by and imagines she loves Sergeant Redding of the police, who stops at her home as he is en route to Fort Desire with a warrant for the arrest of her brother, whose identity is unknown to him. Pierre learns of the Sergeant's mission, and with the connivance of Galbraith pere he executes a plan by which the officer is drugged and detained at the road-house, but Jen, who has been kept in ignorance of the plot, takes the sleeping officer's coat, hat and papers and delivers at the fort the evidence against her own brother. The boy is captured and imprisoned, and his sister is half-crazed over her unwitting aid in his arrest. Then the half-breed undertakes to rescue the prisoner. He takes Jen into his confidence, and while they are riding to the fort he tells her of his love, this scene being one of the prettiest in the play. They are overtaken by the police, and Jen hides Pierre in a crevice of the rocks. She convinces Sergeant Redding, in command of the squad, that she is alone, and the men leave her. Pierre emerges from his hiding place and is consulting the cards as to what his next move should be when an old enemy of his, Jap Durkin, a police guide, returns and discovers him. Here occurs what has been pronounced a most sensational hand-to-hand knife fight and Durkin's defeat. Then comes the usual happy ending. The boy escapes to Montana and Jen and Pierre are married. Evelyn Vaughan will play Jen, and John Ince, Pierre. Howard Hickman is cast for Sergeant Redding, Will R. Walling for Jap Durkin, Louis Bennison for the elder Galbraith and William Garwood for his son.

Savoy Theatre

The last performances of that comic-opera delight, King Dodo will take place on McAllister street, near Market, this Saturday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday night, Forty-five Minutes from Broadway, George M. Cohan's musical production, will begin an engagement limited to one week. The story of the piece is an amusing recital of the doings of New York suburbanites, with a plot that develops interestingly and Forty-five Minutes from Broadway is easily Cohan's best effort in the line of play-writing. The cast includes such favorites as Charley Brown, Elizabeth Drew, Ninon Ristori, Louise Gardner, Joseph Kauffman, Susan Chisnell, May Newman, James H. Manning, James A. Davett, Harry Gwynette and others. New Rochelle, which is just three-quarters of an hour from Broadway, is a typical small town, where visitors notice standing around the railroad station the local yokel, straw in mouth, waiting to see the trains pass and discussing the political situation of ten years ago. A bargain matinee will be given on Thursday, with the usual performance on Saturday, Christmas afternoon. That delightfully droll comedian, Ezra Kendall, will follow Forty-five Minutes from Broadway at the Savoy Theatre, in his bucolic comedy, The Vinegar Buyer.

Spotlights

San Franciscans who have been abroad will find especial delight in the first act scene of Fritz Scheff's production of The Prima Donna. It represents the interior of one of those little cafe chantants that are visited by everybody whoever sets foot in Paris. The gaiety, the sparkle, the general air of careless pleasure seeking, are all communicated in some subtle manner to the audience. At every moment the stage is full of life and action. The soldiers sing and drink and make love to the pretty girls. The artists who act as entertainers do their various specialties, and then pass through the little audience on the stage soliciting money.

The versatility of Estha Williams is a delight to her many Peoria admirers who appreciate her genius. In the Old Cross Roads Miss Williams as Parepa, the octoroon, played an emotional part and played it well. As Colonel Billy in As the Sun Went Down she carries a very dissimilar role, and carries it with a dash and verve that is all her own. Whether the part was created for Miss Williams or Miss Williams created the part, matters little—they fit to a nicety. The play, which opened for a three days' run at the Majestic last night, is a melodramatic comedy of the better order. Dead men are not scattered around promiscuously, but there is love and adventure deftly interwoven in a fascinating story well staged with elaborate scenic embellishment. Miss Williams is well supported, among the principal characters being W. A. Whitecar in the part of The Tarantula; A. E. Chatterton, Edwin Walter and others well known in the mimic world. The play throughout has a twang and breeziness of the West, depicting its vices and its virtues. Its interest is fascinating and the verdict on its first appearance one of unqualified approval.—Peoria Journal.

A Chat with Bell Gold in Her Dressing Room

Bell Gold, who is responsible for much that is clever in the Eddie Foy show, is best described as an animated whirlwind off the stage, and especially when subjected to an interview with a newspaper reporter.

Emile Ackermiller, manager of the company, led the way to the dressing room, behind the scenes, and sank his fist into the heavy door. There was a sound of hurry—and the door opened. Bell Gold stood looking out in negligee, followed by a scream of laughter from somebody inside, and with, "Oh, heavens, excuse me a moment," the somebody was left with impressions.

Miss Gold appeared in less than thirty seconds in a very handsome kimona and bade me enter.

"Well," said Miss Gold, "I suppose you want the story of my life. Guess I am in for it, so here goes:

"I was born in Macon, Georgia, November 21, 1882—and use my own name on the stage. On my mother's side I am related to General Devreaux of France. My father was Irish, a direct descendant from Oliver Goldsmith. He dropped the 'smith' when he came to this country.

"Well, after the usual course of measles, whooping cough, kindergarten, etc., I became a newspaper woman at the early age of twelve—the youngest on record.

"When I was fourteen, John R. Cockerill sent me to write up a play, from behind the scenes. -I fell in love with the life at once—that settled newspaper work for me.

"I went to John Doris who gave me my first part, and later predicted I would be a 'knock-out.' I'll leave it to the public whether I am or not. Anyway, the public is very generous in its treatment of me and my work, and I can't tell how much I appreciate it. Now, what else can I tell you?" asked the roughish Miss Gold.

"Have you ever been married?"

Hesitatingly she looked at me and said: "I have played everything from melodrama to Shakespeare, and if I ever find anybody that even hints I might have a voice, I'll try grand opera. Oh, I just love Tetrassini."

Again I asked: "Have you ever been married?" Once more that same look. "My recreation is studying characters, dialects, gestures, walks, costuming and everything that makes one person different from another."

Once more I risked it. "Have you ever been married?"

With a hearty laugh, she said, "I would have been, but John McNally wrote another coon part in In Hayti, and I was afraid I would turn black if I played black face another year. I thought three years were quite sufficient in the Ham Tree. The Shuberts promised to do something great for me next season, and I guess their word is good."

Never faltering, once again I asked, "Have you ever been married?"

"Oh, goodness, no, I never read Isben; I prefer THE DRAMATIC REVIEW or the New York Mirror just now. Well, that's all. Rather short for one's life, don't you think?"

"Miss Gold, will you do me a favor, please?" And then I started on the old query, but she capitulated before I could begin, with:

"Tell you whether I am married or not, eh? Well, yes, I'm married to A. W. Cross, who was manager for Walker Whiteside for nine years."

Feeling I had accomplished something, I said good-night to as pleasant a little person as one would want to talk to. SYLVIA ASHTON.

Correspondence

MISSOULA, Mont., Dec. 9.—Still on the job and things are good with us though the weather has been cold and the wind—well the wind blew, in fact, it continues to blow, causing the mercury to look like nine below. (That nine is not German.) Honest if someone should say "want to get to a warmer climate," I'd jump from here to—wherever they suggested. Do you know where I can get a location for this company? One bill a week? Around the warm belt? This week and next there are some very strong attractions at the big house. 7th, Honeymoon Trail; 8th, Concert Company; 9th, The Alaskan; 10th, Beverly; 13th, Max Figman; 16th, Wm. Crane; 17th, Third Degree. Business is fair for the big ones but the popular priced stock house is making the money. Miss Winston is not only clever, but is exceptionally versatile and extremely magnetic, in fact, far too good an actress to be in a stock company. In spite of the bad weather, last week, business held up at this theatre. The Winston Company is by far the most popular stock combination ever in this city. The members are easy to meet, very agreeable and have made a host of friends. This week The Girl of the Hills is causing no end of keen interest. It is a southern play full of heart interest and comedy. Following this play, Manager Lionel has one of those ever popular rural comedies ready and in preparation, a strong labor bill. Much trouble is being experienced by agents owing to the strike of the switchmen. Their paper shipments are delayed and none have second men to look after things. Some of the boys begin to show grey streaks through their hair already. On top of all this the storms are giving the managers their share of worry to make towns in time to give the performance. The Climax rang up at 10:10 and it looks now as though Beverly would get the same dose. Crane's agent was in last night and like all good fellows made a fine impression. By the way, not to advertise, there is a hotel here that is hard to beat (The Shappard). Tell the boys not to overlook this as it is the one best bet here. You have no doubt read in the papers about the small-pox scare here. There is no quarantine law in this state and small-pox is a most common sickness. Indignation meetings have been called to force quarantine but that does not stop those who have the disease from attending theatres or going about the stores spreading illness to others. Manager Lionel, at the Family Theatre, has ordered the house fumigated daily, and Mr. Moulton stands at the door evenings, firmly refusing admission to anyone whom he suspects might have this undesirable disease.

Much attention seems to be centered on the left arms of Lionel and Moulton; one might be lead to suppose a 'Frisco flea was traveling afar from home. A Merry Christmas from M.

MARYSVILLE, Dec. 11.—King Dodo with a bunch of musical workers treated the theatre-goers. The costumes were elaborate and appropriate. Miss Kent was certainly a picture in the black costume that she wore in the second act. She was also stunning in her other costumes and sang well, being in splendid voice. William Friend played the part of King Dodo most satisfactorily. Zoe Barnet, always a favorite, was fascinating. Louise Mink is a beauty. The chorus is exceptionally strong, all being good singers, snappy throughout and full of catchy music.

SAN BERNARDINO, Dec. 7.—Last night at the Unique Theatre the Girton stock company presented All the Comforts of Home. Three years ago Percy Girton opened at this theatre with a very strong attraction, and played a very successful engagement for ten weeks. During this time he gave theatre-goers the best of plays. Last night Mr. Girton presented a stronger company than before. The company numbers fourteen in all, and each is an actor of ability. The favorite, Ina Shepard, is with the company again in the lead. In this play she is seen as Fifi Artoneski, and did a clever bit of acting. James Dillon, as Alfred Hastings, did well. He makes a very good appearance. Corbett Morris, as the fellow "who always gets half," is excellent in the part. Richard Scott plays the part of Dabney, a broken-down music teacher. James Usher takes Gillet's character part of Theodore Bender, a retired produce dealer. His interpretation of the part kept the audience in roars of laughter. Gertrude Claire is no doubt the best character woman yet seen at the Unique. She is extremely funny.

RIVERSIDE, Dec. 9.—In spite of heavy rain, Three Twins to good business. Audience well pleased. Coming, David Warfield on the 16th; Top o' th' World, 25th; Jefferson Brothers, 27th. CHAS. E. HEATH.

HENRY DUGGAN and wife, Anna L. Bates, formerly members of Dick Ferris Auditorium Stock Company, Los Angeles, are meeting with great favor in two Eastern productions this season. Miss Bates is playing the part of a suffragette in Henry W. Savage's Florist Shop Company. Mr. Duggan is under Klaw and Erlanger's management, in support of Fanny Ward. His character is similar to Dr. Juttner in Old Heidelberg, a part he has long being identified with.

What Philadelphia Presents to the Theatre Goers This Week

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 11.—On the one hand the immutable laws of the Catholic Church binding a woman who has vowed her life to its service by indissoluble contract, on the other the overpowering passion of a man for the woman he loves. This is a tense situation depicted on the stage of the Lyric Theatre by Viola Allen and a magnificent cast, who present a dramatized version of Marion Crawford's novel, The White Sister. It is unrelieved by any momentary departure from the conflict between the two warring forces, the church and nature. You cannot deny the powerful appeal of this play. Skillfully handled, so that no critic could bring against it the charge of belittling religion or perverting its symbols with stage clap-trap, the play presents a problem rather beyond the province of the average theatre-goer. Yet through its four acts, charged with intensity and set altogether in an ecclesiastical background, the audience showed no signs of lack of interest, and in at least ten curtain calls at the end of the third act Monday evening expressed its satisfaction with Miss Allen, James O'Neill, William Farnum and the principals in the company. The play is an exposition of the principle that the laws of religion are stronger than the laws of life; that the individual is an impotent factor in the struggle against faith and the dictums of the church. It is not, however, dogmatic, but tells with unrelenting intensity, in a succession of dramatic acts, the story of the white sister who renounces the world for the convent when she believes the man she loves has been killed in an African expedition. Her reviving humanness at finding him alive, the brief struggle of her heart souls, her final renunciation of her vows, not because she wishes to repudiate them, but because he threatens to kill himself if she does not, and his suicide, committed to protect her from the calumnies of a malicious relative, these things offer dramatic opportunity which was grasped by the members of the company. Each character possessed psychologic value. Viola Allen, with keen artistry, submerged her vivid personality beneath the white habit of the religious, and gave to her character a wistful spiritual grace, a sense of detachment and other worldliness which showed a perfect sympathy with the part. James O'Neill as Monsignor Saracenesca, embodied the inexorable canonic attitude of the church, yet revealed its response to human misery. William Farnum vitalized with splendid art his role of the lover, and Minna Gale, as the intriguing countess, and Fannie Addison Pitt, as the old governess, were both factors in the artistic fitness of the play. WALNUT STREET THEATRE—Paid In Full, Eugene Walter's remarkably acute analysis of everyday life in New York, entered upon its second week of a three-week run. Although Philadelphians have already witnessed this play given by a different company at the Walnut last winter, it is a drama of sufficient vital truth, dramatic power and splendid workmanship to be seen and enjoyed many times over. It is a play of a decade, surely, and has attracted wide notice and constant praise throughout the country. In the hands of this company it is given adequate life on the stage, and the more strong and stirring story of the play lost none of its former intensity. Paid In Full needs no new praise as a play. It is already written down as among the first half dozen leading dramas of American life ever produced on the stage. It is a play that never fails to interest everyone, for the trials and tragedies and glories of our own American life are given magnificent counterfeit presentment. Thomas Coffin Cooke is the new Joe Brooks, Mrs. Brooks is done by Edna Brothers, Captain Williams by Frank C. Burton, William S. Lyons, Hazel Chapple and Kate Fletcher completed the company. ADELPHI THEATRE—Truly sans intermission were the laughs evoked since the appearance of The Blue Mouse at the Adelpheia Theatre. Not since Are You a Mason? than this frisky play that Clyde Fitch has so cleverly adapted to the taste of American audiences. The spirit of the fun making is maintained throughout, at a high level, by the unusual excellence of its interpretation. The leading actors have been imbued with a sense of comedy, and an appreciation of farcical extravagance that brings so many of the surprising complications of The Blue Mouse the atmosphere of irresistible mirth. Mabel Barrison in the name part, Harry Connor, Zelda Sears and Hall McAllister are the chief factors in the commendable work. All the roles, however, are in suitable hands. GARRICK THEATRE—When Grace George was seen at the Garrick early in the year in Thompson Buchanan's comedy of contemporary social life, A Woman's Way, the worth of the play as a successor to her very successful presentation of Sardou's Divorçons had recognition. A Woman's Way does not in any manner bedim the lustre of the sparkling Sardou comedy, but it is a story having to do with a prospective divorce and the similarity of theme has not been a deterrent in the making by Thompson of an enjoyable entertainment, and in the providing of a role for Miss George, wherein her delightful comedy methods have full exercise. Of course, the audience at the Broad, seeing Miss George in the Buchanan play, found her as charming as of old, and, moreover had the felicity of witnessing generally fine performance by her supporting cast. She has just the sort of role in Marion Stanton, the clever woman who sets her house in order when the shadow of divorce falls upon her, that is suitable to the fine talent for comedy of his star, and she is always a delight to her keenly interested audience. Since its first performance here the comedy has been made more smooth in the telling, and the company that now supports the star is particularly able. C. Aubrey Smith has the role of Howard Stanton, whose little joy ride with Mrs. Blakemore is the beginning of the misunderstandings of husband and wife. In this role Frank Worthing was formerly seen, but Smith is in every way a worthy successor, and may be said to read his lines with even greater skill than was shown by Worthing. Mrs. Blakemore. Carolyn Kenyon, gave full value to her lines, and Jack Standing was also an impressive personality as one of the flames of the attractive widow. Henry Miller, Jr., Evelyn Carter Carrington and Ruth Benson added further to the strength of the cast. The production was well staged and the women wore some magnificent gowns. Miss George, though plainly suffering from a cold, showed no signs of her disability in the character of her work, and her gracious personality and her skill as a comedienne were displayed to advantage. CHESTNUT STREET THEATRE—Margaret Anglin acted in J. Hartley Manners and Henry Millers' adaptation of the Wilkie-Collins novel, The New Magdalen for a year and a half, but the play, known as Zira, had never been presented by her in this city. An opportunity to pass judgment on this drama was given at the Chestnut Street Theatre when the Orpheum Players, with Marion Barney in the role assumed originally by Miss Anglin, gave the piece a worthy interpretation. A point of interest was the appearance of Emmett C. King in the part that had been assigned to William Ingersoll, but that the retirement of Ingersoll from the company shifted to the newcomer. The play is in a prologue and three acts, but it is rather sketchy in character, and was palpably written to provide emotional opportunities for the star. Miss Barney seized these opportunities and ably presented the two strong scenes in which she as Zira is confronted by Miss Wilding. Leah Winslow, as Ruth Wilding played the role in a very creditable way. Helen Reimer lent her ripened experience and her considerable talent to the part of Lady Constance Clavering, and George D. Parkes gave full value to the role of Captain Sylvester, who steps aside to make way for the Rev. Clavering in his love for Zira, or rather Hester Prent, as she is in reality. Other members of the company played with proper and becoming skill. The Dixie Quartette closed in Newark, N. J., Saturday evening and returned to their homes in Philadelphia, where they will enjoy a much needed rest until after the holidays. Manager Franklin will play the boys on small vaudeville time during their stay here, helping them in harness for their long run which will take them way into September. Mr. Franklin announces he has discovered a great find in Horace Wolstenholme, who possesses an exceptionally high tenor voice, blended with sweetness and harmony. As a solo singer, Mr. Wolstenholme has little equal and never fails to leave a good impression with his audience. Before singing with the Dixie Quartette, Mr. Wolstenholme was connected with the Forest Trio, and at one time with the Volgels Minstrels. In addition to being the manager and originator of this quartette, Carlton Franklin still retains his position as 2nd tenor, and leads the boys along the lines of success. George Williams, well known in the quartette field and the original base singer in the Newsboys' Quartette, never fails to score with his heavy work, for he possesses a deep and rich bass voice. In fact, there is not much that Mr.

Fred L. Alles

The name and personality of Fred L. Alles is a familiar one to visiting show people who play in Los Angeles. Mr. Alles is the guiding spirit of the Alles Show Print, and for years he has dominated the show printing business of Los Angeles and Southern California. From a small beginning years ago he has developed a great business, and during a visit to the southern city five weeks ago the editor of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW found this establishment running to full capacity, three shifts a day. There is one thing always noticeable about the Alles work. It is characterized by a clean-cut artisticness that is often sadly lacking in what goes by the name of show printing. By a persistent policy of always turning out the best work, and by a mastery of the peculiar phases that obtain in show printing, Mr. Alles has seen his establishment grow into a big institution, and while he has been busy with the demands of his business he has found time to engage in the activities of a leading citizen. He has been a president of the Chamber of Commerce, is foremost in all public matters and has twice refused the Republican nomination for mayor.

Williams doesn't understand about harmony, as he is able to sing any part when necessary, and as a director he is the right man in the right place for any time. Lyn Castor proves himself a baritone singer who possesses a baritone voice, and is heard to excellent advantage. He is originally from the Coulson Quartette. Director Williams is preparing a new score of songs and with a combination of harmony that he has to work with there is no doubt but what the Dixie boys will do justice to them. The Philadelphia Dispatch credits the Dixie Quartette as being one of the best singing fours in the East.

CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

The Shuberts announce that they will soon produce a new American drama of contemporary interest entitled The Man Higher Up. The play is by Arthur J. Eddy, author of Ganton & Co., the Chicago novel, which was dramatized by J. Hartley Manners under the name of The Great John Ganton, in which George Fawcett is playing.

Louis Kelso

Louis Kelso, who played the lead at the Garret Theatre here recently in The Western Honeymoon Trail shared honors with Bert Baker, the star. Mr. Kelso is an exceptionally clever comedian. He can sing, dance and act and do all three unusually well. Mr. Kelso is to be featured with his wife next season in a big musical comedy, and with two such able artists the comedy parts will undoubtedly be a success. Mr. Kelso has been with some of the best shows and biggest successes on the road. He was leading man with Raymond Hitchcock last season, and Arling Boling (Mrs. Kelso) was the prima donna. He and his wife make a very stunning pair. They have a standing offer of a most flattering nature to come to San Francisco, and we all hope to see them, for they will surely make good.

Arling Boling

The above likeness is that of Arling Boling, in private life Mrs. Louis Kelso, one of our coming prima donnas. Miss Boling will be remembered as prima donna with The Honeymoon Trail, which played here recently. She is a very stunning brunette and always attracts great attention from the number and elegance of her gowns. Miss Boling has a high soprano voice of great power and sweetness and her stage presence is most attractive and compelling. With her husband, Miss Boling will be featured next season in a big musical comedy production.

Stock For Vallejo

Pryce Mackeye opened in the Faragut Theatre, Vallejo, Sunday, in stock, putting on tabloid plays in connection with vaudeville. The company is composed of Reva Raymond, Florence Young, Arthur Hohl, James Crockett, Harry Crockett, Harry Hallen, Pryce Mackeye. Hattie Williams, under the management of Charles Frohman, is to make her first stellar appearance here at the new Columbia Theatre, presenting her new comedy, Detective Sparks, recorded as one of the distinct hits of the Eastern season. Marie Cahill, Robert Mantell and Grace George are among the first attractions booked for the new Columbia Theatre.

Alfred Lattell

Do you remember when you were a wee bit of a tot and used to climb up into your mother's or your father's lap and beg to be told a bear story, and how interested you were, and how you never forgot the stories? Well, I'm going to tell you a true bear story and you'll not forget it, either. It's about Alfred Latell, who is the bear with the Eddie Foy company, under the management of Sam and Lee Shubert this season, and he is one of the cleverest animal impersonators in the business today. If you didn't see the Eddie Foy show when it was here, you missed a clever bit of acting. There was only one objection: We weren't allowed to see enough of him. Mr. Latell is so clever that he has had the most flattering offers from European managers. He is specially engaged for feature acts at an enormous salary, under the direction of H. B. Marinelli, for the entire summer at the Olympic Theatre, Paris, France. That speaks for his ability. He is not only clever as a bear, but as other animals. For instance, he was featured with Joe Hart's vaudeville act, Polly Pickle's Pets, playing Push, the St. Bernard dog. He was also a feature in Babes in the Woods, which ran one year at the Lyric Theatre, New York. Mr. Latell has been under the management of Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger, Joe Hart, Ned Wayburn, George W. Lederer and other well known managers, and his services are always in demand.

John Cort, the Big Man of the Northwest, Whose Operations Are Gradually Extending This Way, is in Town

John Cort is in town. The big fellow who touches Duluth in the East with his little finger and stretches his thumb to Seattle and the Puget Sound country, and then with the other hand reaches down to San Francisco, Los Angeles and to El Paso, with Salt Lake, Denver and Chicago thrown in for extra good measure, has been here for the past week putting the finishing touches, in the way of supervisory director, to the new Savoy Theatre that started as the tortoise, but wound up in a flourished blaze of glory as the hare on Sunday night. Incidentally, it may be stated that Mr. Cort, who has built a couple of dozen houses, learned something regarding trade union methods in this bustling city during his strenuous week here. But that is all over now and he has a cosy, pretty little playhouse that is a credit to the city. During a talk with Mr. Cort after he had agreed to pay double wages for night work, and easily said he was sorry he didn't have to pay more, he referred to the growth of his circuit which he started in Seattle eleven years ago. This circuit, as we have just said, directs the destinies of all the theatrical territory between Duluth over the Northern Pacific to the Pacific Ocean, including the British Columbia country, and as far south as the California line. Then, beginning at Chico, the Northwestern Theatrical Association makes a start in California. The new Savoy in this city gives it a San Francisco opening, and Los Angeles, in Oliver Morosco's Majestic Theatre, affords a home for the circuit bookings. Then the territory to El Paso is more or less represented and the Cort Theatre in Salt Lake is an integral part of the circuit enterprise. Associated with Mr. Cort in this comprehensive proposition are Calvin Heilig, who has been for a number of years very successful in Portland theatricals, and Dick Sutton, the Butte theatrical notable. In the individual apportionment Mr. Cort tours and has the personal lease on fourteen houses; of these, three are in Seattle, and the rest in Helena, North Yakima, two in Spokane, one in Walla Walla and Baker City, the Colonial and Bungalow Theatres in Salt Lake City, one each in Chico, San Francisco, and a majority interest in a Chicago theatre, the new house, the Cort Theatre, in which Messrs. Frazee and Herman are interested. This will be a producing house for musical comedy, putting on two shows each year. Mr. Cort will not go into the road game very strongly with his new shows. At present he has King Dodo and Commencement Days and Max Figman, the comedian. Eventually Figman will be the only one retained outside of the shows sent out from the Chicago theatre. Figman's contract has six years yet to run and is regarded as a valuable asset.

Asked as to his connection with the Western stock game, Mr. Cort replied: "Both Mr. Heilig and myself are in with George Baker in the stock proposition, which is directly under Mr. Baker's management. We will have stock in the new stock house in Portland, in Seattle at the Grand, in one of our Spokane theatres, and in Salt Lake City at the Bungalow, now under lease to the Van Dyke Company, which lease expires in January, 1910. This summer I will put in a musical comedy stock company at the Savoy." Some other observations are valuable as bearing on our Western theatrical situation.

"San Francisco is the most expensive town in America, when it comes to running a theatre. The Middle West and the Coast are in good shape, much better than the East, and have been for the past ten years. In all the large cities there are too many theatres, as only ten per cent of the population can be classed as theatregoers. It means the survival of the strongest." Mr. Cort believes that the $1.00 prices for the splendid class of shows that he will bring here, as indicated by King Dodo and Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway, will make the Savoy Theatre a popular institution of San Francisco. It looks very much like it, so far.

Bellingham to Have Fine Stock

BELLINGHAM, Wash., Dec 13. Bellingham is preparing for a fine Christmas affair. On the afternoon of Christmas day, beginning with a matinee, Beck's theatre will present to its patrons a superb stock company. The personnel of the stock company includes some of the best known names in their various lines in the profession. Victory Bateman will be the leading woman. William Dills is to be the comedian. Arthur S. Hull, a handsome and talented leading man, prominent in that capacity in Philadelphia and Indianapolis, has been engaged for juvenile leads. Philip Sheffield, Robert Webb Lawrence and George Clausen will have good parts. Brenda Fowler, who enjoyed long popularity in Los Angeles, will be second woman. Mary Golden from Salt Lake will play important parts. Mildred Disbrow, a well-known Eastern utility woman, who has just closed a season in Portland, is another member. Carrie Clark Ward, one of the best known character women in the profession and a headliner for years with the Orpheum circuit, will be the character woman of the company. She was playing an important part in Wilkesbarre, Pa., when she signed for Bellingham and stepped out of her makeup to board the train for this city. The ingenue work of the company will be delegated to Oliver Adair Leonard, a young girl who has made Bellingham her home for the past six or eight years. Carl Reyna, the scenic artist of the company, is well known locally. The opening bill is Are You a Mason, with other royalty plays will follow. And to cap all the above, Sedley Brown, the Titian-haired veteran, will direct the stage. Nothing doing but fine shows.

BURT.

Wm. Cullen, Who Has The Alaskan, Finds Seattle- Still Welcomes the North Pole Opera

SEATTLE WASH., Dec. 13, 1909
Moore Theatre. "The Alaskan," the Seattle-made opera, has returned to the Moore and was accorded a warm welcome last night. A lot of new comedy and new songs have been introduced into the piece, much to its improvement. The old, familiar scenes are all retained, and the new production goes with a snap and a vim. The chorus is endowed with good looks, and the principal parts are well disposed of. Alhambra Theatre. "Mr. Hopkinson's" visit at the Alhambra has been extended for a second week. This is one of the most entertaining comedies ever seen here and the attendance at the boulevard theatre bids fair to be large for the balance of the week. Grand Theatre. Yesterday set a new record at the Grand in point of attendance, the attraction being the "Soul Kiss" which will continue until Wednesday night. The dancing of Mlle. Pertina won the instant approval of the audience. The piece has an elaborate mounting and the musical numbers are many and varied. Seattle Theatre. "On Trial for his Life," Owen Davis' play of the Southwest, is being vigorously given by the Russell & Drew players, much to the satisfaction of the patrons of the Seattle Theatre. Lois Theatre. The Lois stock company have made a new departure from their regular line of plays, and are offering "The Lottery of Love." Orpheum Bill. Franklyn Underwood and Frances Sloffen head the Orpheum bill opening this afternoon in "Dobb's Dilemma." The Basque grand opera quartet is a strong feature, and the following classy acts complete the bill: The Zanettos, famous entertainers; Frank Tinney, black face; Belle Davis and her three dancing pickaninies; James B. Donovan and Rena Arnold, in "Doing Well, Thank You"; Fox and Foxies' circus. Majestic. The Romany grand opera troupe, a company of seven splendid voices, leads the bill which opens at the Majestic theatre with the matinee today. The Baltus four, Olympian acrobats, are an added attraction, and other good ones are J. C. Tremayne and company, in "The Girl of the Times"; Gardner and Goder, black face comedians, and Frank Marckley, king of the banjo. Pantages today. The bill is headed by May Tully and company, in her playlet "Stop! Look! Listen!" The Novelty dancing four have a high-class dancing turn. Valdare and Varne are comedy cyclists. The La Van trio do sensational gymnastic work in a funny way. Nancy Withro appears in an original pianologue. Del-a-Phone is a great mimic and comedy vocalist. Helen Lowe is still there with a pretty song, and the Pantagescope has interesting pictures.

E. MORGANSTERN.

San Diego is the Busiest Town in a Theatrical Way on the Pacific Coast

SAN DIEGO, CAL., Dec. 14, '09.
The season of 1909 has been a very successful and prosperous one for all theatrical managers here, both big and little. Genial Jack Dodge, manager of the Garrick, has been more than ordinarily busy, there being very few dark nights at his show-shop, and the S. R. O. sign hasn't had an opportunity to get dusty. Mr. Dodge shows all visiting showmen every consideration and does everything in his power to make their stay here a pleasant one, and, as a rule, these favors are greatly appreciated. Jack's sunny disposition and accommodating ways have earned for him "The Whitest Showman in the Business." David Warfield will appear at the Garrick in the Music Master December 17-18 with a special matinee Saturday. The house will be sold out at every performance. Christmas matinee and night the Three Twins will return. December 28 Bailey and Austin in the Top o' the World. December 31 and January 1 Florence Gear in Fluffy Ruffles. Charlie King and his excellent stock company, featuring Marjorie Rambeau, are playing the thirteenth week of their engagement at the Pickwick, and the popularity of the organization seems only to increase with each succeeding week. Mr. King has been giving his patrons the very best plays obtainable, paying the very highest royalties. Mr. King, besides playing leads, also directs and manages both the front and back of pany is putting on is evident from the large audiences at every performance.

Miss Rambeau is responsible in no mean way for a large share of the success of the company. She is, without a doubt, one of the most popular leading ladies that has ever appeared here, both on and off the stage. She reads her lines exceptionally well and is a conscientious and hard worker. This week the company is putting on Out of the Fold in a very creditable manner. Miss Rambeau as Helen Gray, the young school teacher, has a clear understanding of the part and gives her usual excellent interpretation. Ernest Van Pelt plays opposite Miss Rambeau in this piece, and appears to better advantage than in any other previous roll during his engagement with the King Company. Charles King plays a character part this week, that of Big Jim, a kindly old sheepherder, and does excellent work. Pietro Sasso, Lillian Burnett and Elaine Davis are congenially cast, and do full justice to their respective parts. Jack Donnelan, manager of the Queen, the Sullivan and Considine playhouse, has worked up a nice business here. That Donnelan understands the management of a vaudeville house is evident from the business-like manner in which it is run. His advertising matter is gotten up weekly in a flashy, yet very tasty, manner that cannot help but draw attention. His bills each week have been composed of the best acts traveling over the S & C time, and they seem to get better right along. Increased attendance indicates the appreciation of the local public. His bill this week is well rounded out and is composed of the following acts: Colby and May, the ventriloquist and the Maid, Al. Williams, balancing act, LaVelle and Grant, hand balancing act, Josephine Ainsley, soubrette. Moving pictures and Peerless orchestra conclude performance.

The Isis Theatre opened last night under the Shubert Management with a splendid production of The Mar From Home to a crowded house and scored a big success. Manager Gross advises that the Shuberts will send some of their best productions here for two and three night stands. Among the early bookings are: Chas. Cherry, in the Bachelor, Two Men and That Woman, Frank Daniels, Maxine Elliot, Southern and Marlowe. The Grand Theatre, which was recently remodeled and renovated for Calmy and Lebovitz late of San Francisco, is now running full blast and good sized houses are the rule every performance. H. C. Moore, of the Empire, is packing 'em in twice nightly. Mr. Moore shows nothing but the [very] latest films, having them weeks ahead of the other motion picture houses here, and this, of course, tends to popularize his house. About February 1, 1910, The Empire Theatre Company will begin construction of a new house, which, when completed, will seat about 1000. The Bijou and Union with motion pictures and illustrated songs report excellent business. About February 1, 1910, work will be commenced on John D. Spreckels $500,000 theatre to be erected on Second and D streets, right in the heart of the city. The building will be of reinforced concrete and will be one of the finest theatres on the Pacific Coast, seating about 1400, and will be devoted to the Klaw and Erlanger attractions. Dodge and Wyatt will, in all probability, manage the house. Work has commenced on Walter Fulkerson and Scott A. Palmer's new theatre at Third and C streets. The house will be known as the Savoy and will cost approximately $150,000. It will have a seating capacity of about 1500 persons, and will be strictly up to date in every respect. It is possible the house may book road shows upon its completion, otherwise it will be given over to musical comedy. Fred Ballien will open his cozy little theatre which is located on Fourth street directly across from the Isis, about January 1st. It will be known as the Princess, and will be devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures. He will book the vaudeville either through Bert Levy or Pantages. Jack Dodge, of the Garrick, returned home today from San Francisco where he concluded arrangements with Meyersfield whereby the Orpheum will send their shows down here weekly, playing the Garrick Monday to Thursday with a Wednesday matinee. This will allow performers two and one-half days to get to Salt Lake City to open the next week. LUNDQUIST.

NEW ORLEANS, December 14.
Tulane Theatre—Cohan & Harris Minstrels, featuring George Evans and his band of honey boys, are doing a fair business. Mixed in with lively music, of the Cohan standard, and merriment is a one-act musical comedy styled The Fireman's Picnic. The company numbers quite a few good entertainers with good voices. Of course, Evans is the pivotal point round which the show revolves. He is a capital comedian with a method hit, These Good Old Days, makes a along original lines, and in his song big hit. John King, Harry Van [?], Sam Lee and Earl Bonham ably assist, and are to be given favorable notice. Next week, Kyrle Bellew. December 19th Mrs. Leslie Carter. Crescent Theatre—The Right of Way, one of the masterpieces of present day stagecraft, is playing to good houses at each performance. The presenting company is in every respect capable and this is said without reservation having in mind the brilliant success achieved by the original company last season with Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts in the two leading roles. The play is rich and the action beautifully wrought out. *This year Hallett Thompson and P. August Anderson essay the dominant roles of Charley Steele and Jas. Portugais, and both scored triumphantly. Thompson evinces painstaking study of the character of the cynic who doubts all that is good and only embracing faith in the end through the sweet learning of love and encouragement. Anderson, in the character part of the Canadian, rugged though loyal and honest, stands out with pre-eminence. His is a great piece of work and will be well received all along the line. Miss Arleen Hackett has a fetching charm of both personality and talent. Helen L. Warde, D. C. Lewis, Francis Dellion and Carlyle Blackwell are entitled to individual mention for distinctively good work. This company will be seen on the coast and is being piloted there by one old friend, George Hunt; next week George Sidney. Our annual Doll and Toy fund for the benefit of the poor children's Christmas is being swelled considerably. This week will show the individual effort of many of the theatrical profession who are giving their time and talent to singing in open street concerts daily, and yet there are those who are base enough to say that nothing good can come from the stage and its big-hearted and liberal devotees.

Reno Stock Meets With Success

The Grand Theatre Stock of Reno, under the management of Harold Holland, has jumped into instant favor. The success of the venture seems assured in this its third week.

Personals

There are some recent changes in the stock at the Seattle Theatre, Seattle. William Dowlan is the new leading man and Frank Seward has joined for characters and Ralph Belmont for juveniles. Al Dickinson has retired.

OLGA STECH returned to the Princess stock Thursday night in the soubrette role of In Africa. Miss Stech's place as a diminutive soubrette has been taken for the last few weeks by Genevieve Victoria, who did not exactly line up to expectations, so Miss Stech was persuaded to return.

MARGUERITE CLARK denies that she and Robert Dempster are married. Last week the New York papers printed a report that the dainty little actress had taken her leading man for better or worse. Mr. Dempster played a stock engagement on the Coast several years ago.

Bessie Clifford and Victor Morley Take Los Angeles by Storm in The Three Twins

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 14, 1909.

"A Merry War" rages amongst the theatrical treasurers all because several members, upon being dropped from the T. M. A., took it upon themselves to form association Number Two and have same incorporated under the laws of the state, using the name, insignia and motto of association Number One. The original order having failed to have this done, gave the dispelled members the chance to steal a march, and now for the fire works! St. Elmo has proved a record breaker at the Burbank Theatre and continues into the second week of big business. Chas. Pike has returned after a month's absence. Frances Nordstrom, who will play leads at the Burbank Theatre from now on, has arrived and will make her local debut in the name part of The Girl Of the Golden West, having been rehearsing same for the past three weeks in New York under David Belasco. Fred'k Belasco will be in the city to direct rehearsals for this production. Dorothy Russell, daughter of the fair Lillian, is spending the winter in Pasadena. On account of serious illness, Mr. Zalle will rest from the active management of the Unique which will be intrusted to Harry Cage and Harry Earle. Nat Goodwin and wife have returned to their Santa Monica home, for a three months' rest. Los Angeles has acquired two motion picture manufactories, now located at Edendale. One company is composed of well known, local people including Hobart Bosworth, Robert Leonard, Wm. Harris, Frank Montgomery, Ed Vivian and Marguerite Favar. Apropos motion pictures, a deal has been closed here whereby the public will soon be given a picture dealing with the inner workings of a printing establishment, showing the working presses, etc. Marguerite Favar, otherwise known as the wife of Captain F. D. Tompkins, has joined forces with Captain Peacock and several playlets by Peacock will be produced through their united efforts. The Brahms Quartette, consisting of four Los Angeles women sent out on the Orpheum circuit by Clarence Drown are meeting with great success. Rosa Roma, whose violin solos will be remembered at the Walker Theatre, when that house was under the management of J. Henry Piper, is now on the Orpheum Circuit. Harry Alexander, once associated with Sparks Berry at the Auditorium, has recently joined Mr. Berry at New Orleans, and will precede the Lombardi Opera company. The Walker Theatre has been leased to Chas. J. Lemoyne for five years, for stock work by a company composed principally of the Le Moyne family. Carmen Phillips and Myrtle Dingwall, both erstwhile members of Princess Theatre Company in Frisco, have joined the Hartman forces at the Grand Opera House.

AUDITORIUM:—Charles Cherry, Ruth Maycliffe and associates continue another week in the delightful, up-to-date comedy, The Bachelor.

BELASCO:—In The Master Key, Cosmo Hamilton has not succeeded in achieving anything wonderful. While it neither lives up to a comedy or a drama, it is punctuated with delightful humor and there are plenty of really good lines. As a whole it lacks consistency. The somewhat shop-worn situation of Capital trying to meet the demands of Labor is the motif of the story. One Edward Chard, in his efforts to reach the source of the labor troubles in his foundry, disguises himself as a clerk, and while frequenting the home of one of his employees, meets the schoolmistress of his model village school. Through her he learns to look upon things in a different light. He wins her consent to become his wife, but upon learning his identity she refuses. However, her love for him is strong enough to make her regret her refusal and to frankly say so. They then decide jointly, to better things by reforms in wages and living conditions. As Edward Chard, Mr. Stone is the bluff, abrupt man of business and makes the character a clear cut performance. Mr. Yearance, as Mathew Hempstead, the obstinate, but eloquent old socialist, is forceful, while the optimistic Tapper of Mr. Appleby is most cleverly done. Frank Camp as Alf Rumble is consistent. Mr. Scott is the good natured but crotchety manager, and Chas. Rugles, as the obsequious Joseph Pring, is delightful as to make up and impersonation. As the heroine, Miss Magrane is as charming as the character demands, and Ida Lewis, Grace Gardiner and Beth Taylor are all happily cast.

BURBANK:—Owing to the large demand for seats, St. Elmo is still holding the stage and the favor of the audiences at this house.

MAJESTIC:—Rex Beach's play of Alaskan life, love and conspiracy with its atmosphere of gold, brutality and politics is the attraction this week. A strong melodrama telling of the fight for hard-earned claims by the honest miner, against a set of grafters aided by weak Federal officials. Woven into the somberness of all this, is a bit of color, in a pretty love story. Allen J. Holuber, with a good stage presence and an excellent voice makes Glenister a manly hero. W. Farwin, without striving for effects gives an exceptionally good picture of Joe Dextery, the burly but honest miner. Edwin Moore, as the foreman, makes the best of the bit of comedy, in the character of Slap Jack Sims. Herbert Ashton with his big, resounding voice enables us to realize the villainous receiver. Frank McQuarrie as the District Attorney is as repulsive as the author evidently intended the same to be. Margaret Oswald has the role of Helen Chester to make womanly and appealing, which she does with considerable dramatic power and intelligence. Elisia Hazlet and Lily Branscombe round out a very good cast. Scenic effects are good and the whole moves briskly.

MASON:—About one of the best musical plays that has appeared in our line of vision this season is The Three Twins. The opposition of a domineering old army officer, to his son's marriage with a charming girl, induces the son to disguise himself in a manner that causes him to be mistaken for two others, brings about a beautiful mix up, and it takes plenty of fun and music and chorus maids to straighten matters all out again. There are the Yama Yama girls, with Bessie Clifford as the Girl, and brightly and vivaciously does she dance her way through. Victor Morely as Tom Stanhope, the son, is a clever light comedian and a most clever dancer. The mechanical effects, including the "swing" and the moonlight scene are out of the ordinary. A fine chorus, well directed is not the least of this company's attractions. Yama Yama, with its new and distinctive business, is still one of the gems and brings many encores.

GRAND:—The Belle of New York is being successfully revived by the indefatigable Hartman, and proves to be some better than quite a few of the later day productions. In two acts and three scenes, we find Joe Fogarty as President of The Young Men's Rescue League with Walter De Leon as Harry his son, who falls in love with a New York actress, who, to prove that she loves him for himself alone doffs her tinsel and fluff, and joins the Salvation Army. Walter Catlett's impersonation of the gentlemanly lunatic is a splendid foil for Joe Fogarty, and together they create most of the fun. Oscar Walch as Bill McGurk, the mixed-drink pugilist, sings The Belle of New York quite the best song in the show. Josephine Islieb has the famous Edna May part which she invests with charm and fascination. Carman Phillips as Fifi and Myrtle Dingwall, as Kissie Fitzgarter, are new members, and bid fair to become favorites. Mr. Hartman now has a long list of principals and a chorus that is improving wonderfully, making this a strong organization.

ORPHEUM:—Edwin Stevens, assisted by Tina Marshall, returns once more with his impersonations of the tried but true characters of Dickens. This week he gives us Dick Swiveler, Grandfather Smallweed and Uriah Heep. His interpretations, so delicate and smooth, each a perfect miniature, make a finished performance in which Miss Marshall takes no small part. Howard's Musical Shetlands make up in cleverness what they may lack in size, and the fun is supplied by the homely, but very funny, dogs. The DeHaven Sextette includes girls, who dance in most effective costumes, headed by Sidney D. Gibson. Their songs are catchy and the dancing good. Milt Wood does some clever stepping, with a chair, also some singing, thereby winning much applause. The holdovers are Our Boys in Blue, McConnell & Simpson, Bobby Pandor and Brother and The Tempest & Sunshine Trio. Motion pictures, illustrating the progress of color photography complete the bill.

LOS ANGELES:—John Sturgeon and his company open the bill in an intense playlet The Markham Divorce Case. The Labalkans and their dog, Folly, offer 15 minutes of fast and sensational work. The Stellings are a team of clever hat throwers. Edna Davenport furnishes much of the fun, with stories, songs and dances. Harry and Kate Jackson have a bright comedy Cupid's Voyage with a rather clever electrical effect. New motion pictures finish the bill.

FISHER'S:—This is James T. Kelly's farewell week and this week's bill, A Dress Rehearsal, is considered one of his best productions. The story is of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick King, who, upon leaving for a trip abroad, gave a farewell entertainment, engaging a broken down actor to write and stage an operetta for their use. A dress rehearsal of these amateurs brings in the fun, which the members of the company, who are all well cast, proceed to set forth.

OLYMPIC:—The Terrible Turk abounding in oriental melody and splendid stage settings, tells of the troubles of the Sultan who, in order to save his life, disguises himself as a Chinaman and places upon his throne in his stead, a German tourist, and then the trouble begins. Jules Mendel as the teutonic traveler, is very good, as well as Dave Morris, who appears as Ali Bluff, the grand Vizer. Laurel Atkins is well cast as the wife of the make-believe Sultan. The chorus has a chance to display itself in much oriental splendor.

UNIQUE:—Melodrama seems to be a grand success at this house, and this week the offering is Sidewalks of New York, a vivid picture of the underworld of the great city. Harry Earl, Grace Rauworth, together with their associates, manage to keep the audience highly interested. Beginning with this week, there is but one performance a day, at this house, with the exception of Saturday and Sunday.

REDLANDS:—The Wyatt (H. C. Wyatt, manager; E. J. Underwood, business manager)—After about three weeks of being a dark house, the Wyatt opened its doors 16 to The Three Twins, which proved to be the best musical comedy of the season. The audience was very large, although the night was stormy. Bessie Clifford as the Yama Yama girl was especially good, and Victor Morley was received with open arms as a real comedian. The engagement of this company in Redlands was of more than ordinary interest on account of the local Elks having played Incog before it was made over into a musical show; 14-15 the Katzenjammer Kids by local children; 21 Carter, the magician; 30 the Jeffersons in Henrietta. Warfield was to have played here this week, but Riverside captured the date.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Dec. 15, 1909.—At the Opera House, (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, Mgr.) 10, The Three Twins, one of the best musical comedies of the season, was presented to a good house; Bessie Clifford, as the Yama-yama girl, was an especial favorite; 11, The Singing Bandits showed to a poor house, but was voted to be excellent by the few present; 22, The Top o' the World. At the Unique the stock company is playing to good business and giving general satisfaction; 16, Schubert's The Man from Home. J. E. RICH.

Charles Frohman expects to continue to present William H. Crane in Father and the Boys for the next two or three seasons, as the comedy has proven the most successful in which Crane has ever appeared and return dates have been booked throughout the East.

The Grand Opera House Building, including the office and plant of the Peoria "Journal" and the Peoria "Democrat" was consumed by fire which started at 1:30 o'clock Tuesday morning in Peoria, Ill. The total loss is more than $200,000, partly insured.

Lottie Kendall

This charming young woman is an established favorite in the realm of opera. She has her own companies and is one of the hits of The Gay Musician. Miss Kendall has a wonderful personality and possesses a beautiful voice. She is noted for her wardrobe, and is a very, very clever girl. Miss Kendall will be featured next season in a big musical comedy by Julian Edwards, and her success can be banked on. She has made a decided hit during the present San Francisco engagement of The Gay Musician.

Joe Muller and the Dead-Heads

Manager Joseph Muller of the Orpheum in Spokane has hit on a plan to suppress ubiquitous "deadhead." Only "ubiquitous" is not the word Mr. Muller uses in referring to the persistent person who tries to get something for nothing. He has framed a list of scriptural quotations bearing on the subject, the symposium being hung in the box office. Here are the quotations:

"In those days there were no passes."

—Numbers XX, 18.

"Suffer not a man to pass."

—Judges iii., 28.

"Thought they roar, yet shall they not pass."

—Jeremiah v., 22.

"Thou shalt not pass."

—Numbers xx., 18.

"So he paid his fare and went."

—Jonah i., 3.

Laurence Irving and Mrs. Irving, who is known on the stage as Mabel Hackney, sailed for the United States last Monday to present in that country Brieu's play, The Incubus.

Eleanor Kent

Eleanor Kent is of pronounced value to the list of principals under John Cort's management. This season she is featured in the prima donna role of Piola, in the Pixley-Luder musical comedy, King Dodo. Tall, well proportioned, with a beautiful mobile face, possessed of unusual dramatic ability and a voice both sweet and of large range and power, she is unquestionably a desirable acquisition to the stage of this country. Miss Kent has been singing principal roles on the five continents for the past ten years, following three years of study for the grand opera stage under Victor Capoul of the Paris Grand Opera and Edmond Duverney of the Paris Conservatoire. Besides the numbers allotted to her in the performance, Mr. Cort has allowed her to interpolate the beautiful ballad-serenade, Good Night, Dear, by Will R. Anderson, and the brilliant waltz song, Gay Butterfly, by Annie Andros Hawley. These songs she selected from hundreds as most fitting for the situations. She sings the former song with the entire male chorus assisting in the ensemble. Miss Kent is a composer of exceptional ability. She has made a hit here.

The Opening of the New Columbia is Approaching

The new Columbia theatre, in Geary street, near Mason, will open January 10. At a meeting of the theatre stockholders last Wednesday the following course was agreed upon. Having subscribed $1000 of the capital stock of the company the sixty stockholders were allowed the privilege of holding two seats for one performance each week. As their names were drawn from a hat, the subscribers chose the date and the seats desired. President Henry T. Scott of the Columbia theatre building company suggested that as Gotlob, Marx & Co., the managers of the theatre, were to auction off the seats for the opening night, donating the premiums to charity, the subscribers should contribute the average premium toward the cause of charity. This was agreed upon. The opening production will be George Ade's play, Father and the Boys, in which William H. Crane will be seen. The date when the seats for the opening night will be auctioned will be January 3, and the place the ballroom of the St. Francis Hotel. The entire proceeds of the auction sale for the first night seats will be turned over to charity. The Protestant, Catholic and Hebrew orphanages will be beneficiaries, and the Actors' Fund of America will also enjoy a proportionate share of the proceeds, as will other institutions not yet named. Permanent seats were selected by the following subscribers: Edward Brandenstein, Max J. Brandenstein, G. A. Berton, L. S. Bachman, C. M. Belshaw, G. Brenner, H. E. Bothin, W. B. Bourn, Jacob Barth, Wakefield Baker, Charles W. Clark, Mrs. W. F. Moffit, Francis J. Carolan, William H. Crocker, Mrs. Annie Driscoll, Frank P. Deering, S. W. Ehrman, Joseph Ehrman, Sidney M. Ehrman, D. W. Earl, Herbert Fleishhacker, William Fries, George P. Fuller, Mortimer Fleishhacker, J. A. Folger, J. L. Flood, Jacob Goldberg, J. D. Grant, Sigmund Greenebaum, Emil Greenebaum, William Gerstle, Lendal M. Gray, Samuel W. Heller, Moses Heller, E. S. Heller, I. W. Hellman, Jr., O. H. Harrison, E. W. Hopkins, Hampton Estate Co., William G. Irwin, M. S. Koshland, W. Kauffman, John W. Keith, Fred Levy, Adolph Mack, Eleanor Mar-

White Rats In Flourishing Condition

There has been a somewhat widespread impression that the vaudeville organization known as the White Rats had practically been permitted to disintegrate in accordance with the usual procedure in stage combinations. Geo. Fuller Golden, the original head of the order, disputed this last week in New York when he said: "We now have four thousand members, all in good standing. Those who did not take sufficient interest in our aims and work to give us their active support were long ago dropped from the roll. We have invested certain capital in theatrical enterprises with such success that our stock now pays fifty per cent per annum. It is open to all members to acquire this stock in ratio to their means, and this has turned out to be an important incentive to outsiders to join us. The great advantage of it is that a member earning a merely ordinary income, and who could not expect to get more than three or four per cent for his savings, can put his money with us and double it in two years. I believe, without any undue optimism, we shall have at least ten thousand members before the end of 1910."

And Also—

"You've no idea of the stunts people will do to get out of paying for a seat," went on Mr. Muller. "Why, I've known 'em to go in the door backward, to make the man there think they were going out."

Bessie Clifford

Bessie Clifford, who is starring with Victor Morley in the Three Twins Company, has made a great success of the part of the Yama Yama girl. Originally, this part was played by Bessie McCoy, but Miss Clifford has so improved it, that she is far ahead of the original Yama Yama maiden. The fair Bessie is a hard worker, puts her heart and soul in her efforts to please, and as a consequence, is a big success all the way around. As a dancer, she is marvelous, one of those geniuses who do not have to be taught, but who dance because it is in them. She is a dainty bit of Dresden china, and is so small that she gives one the impression of being a little girl, scarcely out of short dresses. While here, she took a big share of the honors that went to the Three Twins Company, the popular attraction that it was.

Evelyn Vaughan

Evelyn Vaughan enjoys two unique distinctions. First, she is the most popular leading woman who has ever appeared in stock in San Francisco. Second, she is the highest priced leading woman appearing in a stock theatre in America today. Although she has been on the stage but a few years, and most of that time in stock companies, Miss Vaughan has succeeded in developing a reputation that has gone far afield. At the conclusion of last season in this city she received two very flattering offers to go to New York and there create leading parts in Broadway productions. Another offer was made her to go to Australia and star in American and English successes. Both of these she refused, preferring to remain in San Francisco for another year. Notwithstanding her great success, Evelyn Vaughan is a woman of unassuming personality, and a most gracious personality. The gowns worn by San Francisco's most popular stock actress are marvels of the dressmaker's art. She has one of the best wardrobes of any actress in America. It should not be forgotten that the subject of this sketch is also an actress of marked ability. During her residence in San Francisco she has played almost every conceivable part and has given to each one its proper value. Evelyn Vaughan has not yet reached the zenith of her powers. To continue the figure, her sun is just rising. There is no question but that she will eventually be one of the foremost actresses of our country. She has the mentality, the temperament, the insight and the personal attractiveness that go to make an artist of the first rank.

What's the Use

One of the favorite subjects of the Eastern theatrical writers, and one of the pet projects of Eastern managers is the invasion of England by American managers and American actors, the presentation of American plays by American dramatists, and the eventual capitulation of John Bull and his island to the Yankees. So often is this subject foisted upon the public, and it is attempted with such regularity, that one who follows things theatrical looks for it, as he does for the coming of Spring or the circus. It is developing into a sort of conventionality, based upon well founded facts. Season after season comes, season after season goes, and this now familiar capture of The right little, tight little island by Uncle Sam is brought out, brushed up and passed around. And yet, when it comes to looking at the matter truthfully, when we have laid aside our Yankee jingoism, when we have gone over the matter impartially, have we Americans made any great impression on the English outside of vaudeville? In what way has England admitted, in terms either expressed or implied, that our managers, actors, dramatists and plays have in any way crowded out her own? Grace George went to England with a company that was second to none and presented Divorcons. She was what every actor hates to be, only an artistic success. She returned with no scalps to her belt. The College Widow, one of the best expressions of the life of certain of our young people ever put on the native stage, went across the Atlantic. It returned to the United States with the best press notices an American production was ever given on the other side. Nothing more. Only last week Henry Miller, who is reckoned among the best of American actor-managers, returned from England, where earlier in the season he had gone with The Great Divide and The Servant in the House. Now, there might be some good reason for the former play not appealing to the British public. It deals with American life in the rude, crude, raw making. Its ethics might shock Pall Mall, but that the latter play failed calls for an entirely different reason. It was written by an Englishman; it was acted by people who, if not English, are thoroughly familiar with the demands of the best theatres of London and their audiences; it was staged by Henry Miller, himself an Englishman by birth, who has played with English actors, in English plays. The drama itself is a reflection of certain phases of English life. Miller received notices that were all they should be. Here is one from that unique weekly, M. A. P., edited by T. P. O'Connor. Who could ask for more in the way of kindly publicity and well disposed printers' ink?

Have you seen Henry Miller? That is the question. Not, Have you seen The Great Divide? Henry Miller, the hero in the new Frohman production at the Adelphi, is one of the most wonderful things in romantic actors that ever happened, at all events in this country. Full in feature and burly in body, and with eyes brimming over with the sense of humor, he is externally the type of man that the average English manager would at once associate with the comedy department of melodrama. If you had not seen Henry Miller act, and you were asked, on meeting him for the first time, to guess what line he was in the habit of taking on the stage, you would, in all probability, be ready to swear that he was more often than not the soldier or sailor lover who shared the comic relief responsibilities with the heroine's uncle's maidservant, whose name is generally Bridget. There never was so great a divide as that which separates and distinguishes Henry Miller from the romantic actor as we in England have been trained to accept him. Henry Miller is not a bit like a romantic actor, and yet in the process of making his appeal to our hearts he achieves far greater things than does the Apollo in riding breeches, as the ideal British romantic hero of the stage has somewhere been referred to. To see Henry Miller, to be under the spell of his extraordinarily sympathetic acting for five minutes, is to experience the uncomfortable feeling that romantic drama in England might not have come so many croppers, might not have given so many openings to dreary sex-problematic plays and to music hall sketches, had it shown more belief in what makes a good impression than in what makes a good photograph. Henry Miller possesses that rare power of holding his audience without seeming in the least bit anxious to do so. He does not come down to the footlights to engage your attention. He retires from them to the back of the stage, and you follow him with your eyes wide open and your sympathies held out to him in both your hands. He is a man-magnet, and you feel yourself drawn towards him like a steel-filing or a heimming needle. He never asks for your pity. He slinks away from it. He never looks up at the gallery as much as if to say, "If you have tears, prepare to shed them now!" He is never in the conventional attitude of grief, and he has no table near upon which to flop and bury his head in his arms. He treats you as if you were nowhere near, and were not in the secret of his sorrow. Yet you are after him all the time with your offerings of sympathy. I almost felt hurt with him for not caring whether he had mine or not!

Here is unstinted tribute from one of the most widely read journals of the English capital. And yet, did Henry Miller return in triumph a theatrical Caesar, bringing with him a score of English managers tied in bondage to his chariot wheels? Has London run up the white flag? Have the managers of that city asked for peace at any price? It is no pleasure to chronicle that the season was as disastrous in every way, except that of securing kindly attention from the press, as is the venture of some impecunious though daring manager who attempts to foist the impossible members of some cheap dramatic school, in a threadbare drama of other days, upon rural audiences. It is no use to quote the Stars and Stripes in cases such as this. It avails nothing to say that we are the greatest, the grandest of all nations. Granted, we are still failures, theatrically speaking, in the realm of the English theatre. Frankly speaking, calling a spade a spade, and not an agricultural implement, the English do not want us. What is more, they are not going to have us under any conditions. True, individuals have, and no doubt will make successes in a minor way in English companies, but even these instances are rare. We may invade England with the reaper, the bicycle and the sewing machine, and gain results that are gratifying to our sense of national pride and to our bank accounts, but these precedents count for nothing theatrically. That Henry Miller is the last manager to fail in England it is not likely. Others will attempt the same thing, unmindful of the wrecks that cover the shore, of the vultures that hover over the course. Previous examples will count for nothing, and once more the often heralded conquest will go the rounds of the press. And once more a prophet who is without honor in his own country prophesies that these ventures will but add to the long string of sad failures that have attended the attempted encroachment of Americans upon the stage of England. And this brings us back to our title. What's the Use?

Fred Belasco Returns Home with Information of the Big Stock Combination

Fred Belasco returned from a business trip in the East Wednesday night. In regard to his newly formed combination with Oliver Morosco of Los Angeles, Mr. Belasco said: "We propose to maintain and control stock theatres throughout the West and Middle West, and within a year to be as far east as Chicago with our enterprises. We do not intend to send companies from one theatre to another. The Alcazar will retain its stock company just as all of the houses which we will operate will do, but the plays will be sent from theatre to theatre, and our ability to guarantee a long engagement for the various pieces we secure will put us in a position to bid for entirely new works and to buy at first hand the products of the best playwrights. Whenever a big production is called for it will be built here in San Francisco and scenery and costumery will be sent with the manuscript over the circuit of the Belasco and Morosco theatres. Thus San Francisco will become a producing center and we will be the first to make this city so. On account of the somewhat disturbed condition of theatricals in the Middle West we have already been offered seven houses in various of the larger cities of that great section and the culmination of the scheme to establish a circuit of stock houses is thus made a certainty and is now only a matter of the adjustment of the many details." Mr. Belasco was the guest of his brother David in Washington when the latter's dramatization from the French of The Lily was given its first production. "Nance O'Neill was given many curtain calls after the third act, and the play itself is an unqualified hit," reports the returned manager. Mr. Belasco declares that this is the most disastrous season theatrically that New York has ever experienced. Out of the scores of plays which have been produced only seven or eight have been successes.

Sedley Brown

In the person of Sedley Brown America has a stage director who has few equals. Mr. Brown is a man who has been in the business of staging plays for thirty-five years and has followed the growth and development of stage craft in all ins and outs, ups and downs from his boyhood up. He is known in the profession as The man behind the script, and it's a pretty poor play that under his painstaking direction would fail to make a fairly good showing. His record stretches from Boston to San Francisco, and probably every big city in the country has claimed him for a season and greatly appreciated his fine work. He opens in Bellingham Christmas day and he will show the enthusiasts of that enterprising city all of the latest and best in stage production.

LAURENCE IRVING and Mrs. Irving, who is known on the stage as Mabel Hackney, sailed last Saturday from London for the United States to present in this country Brieux's play, The Incubus.

The Four Cohans—The American Royal Family

THE astounding success of this wonderful family is a matter of record. The delightful family spirit of the Four Cohans is something that alone should commend itself to the affections of the American theatre-going public, to say nothing of an artistic ability and temperament that is unique in our theatricals. Of the young genius, George M. Cohan, who heads the family fame, much might be said of his warm and impulsive heart, his tremendous energy and wonderful insight into human nature and his unheralded charitable deeds than would fill a book. But we will leave that to his biographer.

Terkelsen &amp; Henry, Foto.

Eddie Foy

Eddie Foy is still a lasting, vivid memory in San Francisco. His present season in Mr. Hamlet of Broadway has been a succession of triumphs and he is one of the most remunerative stars the Shuberts have. Eddie Foy is a unique figure in American theatricals and his methods and his comedy are all his own. It would be impossible for anyone to successfully imitate him. Companionable and unassuming, and one of the most reliable of actors, Mr. Foy has arrived at that stage where he is regarded as a sure fire card. This is an achievement which few actors can claim.

Denver Has Fine Municipal Theatre

Denver has turned an idea of its Mayor's, Robert W. Speer, into successful operation. Believing that a municipality should provide amusement for its citizens, as well as sweep their streets; and believing that the current prices for high-class productions were beyond their reach, he induced the city to go into the theatrical business on its own account. The Auditorium—the great building in which the National Democratic Convention of 1908 took place—was converted into a playhouse. Then a contract was secured by the Shuberts and they began to send their shows there. The doors were opened Nov. 1. The limit charged for any seat was a dollar; and in the opening week the house held an average audience of 2,700, while the receipts approached $12,000. The history of the building is this: Some years ago the citizens of Denver voted a $400,000 bond issue for the erection of an auditorium. Opponents of the scheme, as a final move in a desperate fight to block the sale of the bonds, brought an injunction suit, which was fought out in the State Supreme Court with a final victory for the city. In the years 1906 and 1907 a total of $190,000 was saved from the current revenues and added to the auditorium fund. The additional amount secured enabled Mayor Speer to have the plans for the building include a system of movable walls and a proscenium arch, by which the structure could be divided in half, one portion being arranged in such a way that with little work it could be fitted up as a thoroughly modern theatre with a seating capacity of 3,000. The building was formally opened by the Democratic Convention last year. Officially, the big steel and cement structure was designed for the usual purposes of a convention hall. As such it was used for the first year after its completion. Politicians and traction magnates and farmers and labor unions held meetings and made speeches and passed resolutions within its ample walls. Fairs and automobile shows alternated with band concerts and campaign rallies. On one never-to-be-forgotten night last summer the "lid" was lifted for a few brief hours, and a prize-fight was pulled off in the hall made historic by the nomination of a Presidential candidate. The contract calls for a season of twenty weeks, the city furnishing the playhouse and the Shuberts the attractions. Receipts and expenses are shared on a basis of 30 per cent to the city and 70 per cent to the theatrical concern. A special clause in the agreement provides that the contract may be nullified by the city without notice in the event of an immoral show being brought to Denver.

A Group of Well-Known Theatrical Men

Van Ness Theatre

Fritzi Scheff is the prima donna of her new opera, The Prima Donna, but Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert have not by any means made the opera consist entirely of Fritzi Scheff. The blythe little Austrian singer is just featured enough to keep the public taste whetted for more of her delightful acting and singing, and in the matter of melodies Victor Herbert has not put his most tuneful lays into Miss Scheff's score. In compensation for this, however, she has in Act II an aria teeming with vocal gymnastics which gives her an opportunity of demonstrating conclusively that the "little devil of grand opera" still retains her remarkable vocal agility. The first act of The Prima Donna is laid in a cafe chantant near Paris, frequented by a lot of rollicking soldiers and gay grissettes, ladies of the type made familiar by Henri Murger's La Vie de Boheme, a sort of French edition of amateur night at the Chutes is in progress and one of the officers, the Count de Fontenne, having composed a love song, bribes the musical director of the cafe, Herr Max Gundelfinger, known as Pop, to get the song a "try out" at the performance. The count is in love with Mlle. Athenée, prima donna at the Opera Comique, but his rich aunt, a haughty marquise, will have him reduced to penury if he marries outside his own class. Not wishing to ruin his prospects the prima donna has flouted the officer's true love. By a fortunate coincidence Mlle. Athenée's automobile breaks down outside the Cafe Chantant just as a poor, consumptive little amateur is rehearsing the count's love song with Pop. The kind hearted prima donna sends the sick girl home and offers to sing in her place, so at the performance the delighted count hears his love song warbled by the woman he loves. The whole of Act I is full of dash and sparkle, particularly the scene where the performers appear on the stage within the stage, and the gay cafe chantant audience of soldiers and grissettes applaud or hiss the performers. In fact Act I sets such a clip that Act II, which transpires amid aristocratic surroundings, cannot but lose by comparison. The Lady Vere de Vere pose which the chorus ladies assume in Act II is entirely proper, but one instinctively yearns for their gay abandon as grissettes. Even the soldiers in Act II are awed into society behavior by the presence of so many duchesses, marquises and other titled dames. The gay prima donna alone retains all her jauntiness up to the happy curtain. It is almost enough to say that the music of The Prima Donna is by Victor Herbert, so intimate that it pleases. Many of the lays are tuneful as well as gay and the orchestration again proclaims that Herbert is a master of his art. The scoring of the comedian's song, Something Always Happens, may be cited as a case in point, for the orchestra not only enhances and sustains the voice, it also introduces almost as many comic effects as does Pop himself and that is saying a good deal, for John E. Hazzard is an excellent comedian who knows how to be funny without the faintest trace of vulgarity. Another performer who adds to the gaiety of the opera is Phil Branson as the Italian vocalist in the cafe chantant scene. In the palmy days of the Tivoli Phil Branson and Tillie Salinger were prime favorites. Their marriage a decade and a half ago was a quasi-public event and it is almost touching to veteran theatregoers to find them still in the same company, for Miss Salinger is playing the role of Margot, Mlle. Athenée's maid. Donald Hall, as the count, plays well up to Miss Scheff as a pleasing and manly lover, and among the other members of the supporting cast Martin Haydon stands out as the graceless lieutenant, William K. Harcourt as the peace disturber, Gilbert Clayton as the martinet colonel, Donald Hall as the gay Fernand and Catherine Steward as a very distinguished marquise. John Lund, the musical director, has his chorus, principals and orchestra well in hand and it seems unjust to conclude the notice without a word of praise for the excellent staging under the direction of John Lathom.

Garrick Theatre

In the Bishop's Carriage is one of the bills that the Alcazar stock company may be depended upon to do well. They have done it that way in the past, have been well schooled in the business of the piece, and are well up in the lines in addition to playing characters that are cast with gratifying results. The Bishop's Carriage was one of the first productions we had in San Francisco just after the big event of 1906, and San Franciscans always feel kindly disposed to the story of the burglar, his girl accomplice and the kindly disposed lawyer who reforms Nance Olden, the girl in the case. It helped us to take our eyes off the damndest finest ruins and to rest them upon something else for the time being and for the moment forget that we were doing business on residence streets, and that our offices were bed rooms or front parlors of but a few months previous. The plot of Miriam Michelson's novel, which ranked as one of the best sellers of its day, and which still retains a goodly percentage of that popularity, is well known to everyone. Miss Vaughn plays the part of Nance Olden, and does it in a manner that is highly creditable to her. Miss Vaughn has never done anything better than she does the part of the girl whose better instincts are aroused through love and kindness. Under her treatment of the character it grows and expands as a flower does from a bud. Her treatment of Nance is altogether a highly artistic, finished piece of work. Will Walling, as Tom Dorgan, does some of his best acting in the role of the burglar. Any young actor who is desirous of getting points should see him work in this part. John Ince, as Hugh Latimer, has a role that enables him to play the manly hero in a way that sets the hearts of the maidens fair in the front of the house all a flutter. Charles Dow Clark has a good character part, the details of which he works out to a nicety that stamps the aforesaid Charles Dow Clark as an artist. William Garwood acts the role of a reporter in a manner that is not a reproach upon that much abused near-profession, that of writing for newspapers. He does not stand about with a brand new lead pencil in one hand and a brand new morocco note book in the other, and ostentatiously take notes all the while he is on the stage. He plays it very naturally. The character of a newspaper reporter is one which some day will be given by some dramatist to the stage, and then people will wonder that they did not laugh before at the usual theatrical burlesque on newspaper men that has stood the test of time for these long years. Howard Hickman as Bishop Van Wagenen, the gentleman whose vehicle enables Nance to make her get away, and from which the novel and the play derive their titles, is of course, excellent. Roy Neill has a small role that enables him to show that he is steadily improving. Robert Joachim also does well as a butler, although it demands but little of him. The attaches of the tenderloin police station as handled by George Baldwin, Isaac Dillon, Walter Belasco and Alden Wheeler, compare most favorably with the playing of the parts in the big production that came to this city just after the big shake-up. As a Christmas present for Grace Travers, let it be said that she is excellent. Bessie Barriscale gets this for her stocking over the fireplace; as Nellie Ramsey she displays a vein of humor that appealed strongly to her audiences. Christie MacLean, who seems to be the par excellence old lady of the Alcazar company, is deserving of more than these few lines, written with the purpose of paying her a well deserved compliment. Irene Shirley, Charles Trowbridge, Glen Jones and Adele Belgarde should receive individual mention, although they do not. The mountings of the play are excellent. It is no small wonder that The Bishop's Carriage has been playing to such good business, when the general excellence of the entire bill is considered.

Savoy Theatre

At 4:30 o'clock of last Saturday afternoon Manager Fred Busey stood in front of the wilderness of scaffolding, mortar, cement, paint and bricks that stood for a new theatre, and pointing to his watch said: "It is now 4:30. We have 27 hours to get ready and brush up—and we'll do it." And it was done. At 7:30 Sunday night the new Savoy was formally opened and at 8:30 it was dedicated to the show business of San Francisco by John Cort's enjoyable attraction, King Dodo. True the stain in spots was a little damp, the walls were fresh and the retiring rooms not yet plastered, but the auditorium was in good shape, and the theatre voted to be a tastily designed, comfortably arranged and acoustically perfect little playhouse, seating a little over 1,300 people. From "the big fellow" (John Cort), and from the other big fellow, Manager Busey, along the line from Ed. Cort and Charlie Newman in the box office to Doorkeeper Caldwell, and past there to the smallest usher, there was affability and a readiness to serve. All of which is well. Of the performance of King Dodo, nothing but the greatest praise can be recorded. Billy Friend surprised and delighted his many friends here by furnishing a most artistic and amusing Dodo. His portrayal was a masterpiece and if Hitchcock, the original, had anything on the present wearer of the crown, it would be hard to convince San Francisco of that fact. Eleanor Kent was a shapely Piola, and proved to be a charming singer, and her costumes were dazzling. Zoe Barnett was given a whirlwind reception that was greater in its fervor than any ever vouchsafed a returned favorite in this city. For over four minutes, the enthusiasm was so great she was unable to proceed. Miss Barnett has improved wonderfully in her dancing and is now one of the best soubrettes in the country. Louise Mink, who played Angela, the King's ward, is a vivacious singer with a fine voice, and her physical endowments are most pleasing. Laura Millard, an old Tivoli favorite, is splendid as Queen Lil. Chas. J. Udell does a very artistic double of the court historian, Bonilla, prime minister, and Wm. Herman West, another old time Tivoli favorite, was splendid in the part of Dr. Fizz. The scenery was a specially attractive feature and the chorus!—well, there has never been a more shapely, a more attractive lot of girls than King Dodo brings with him in his royal entourage. Business has been most encouraging all week, and it really looks as though The Savoy had established itself in popular favor.

Valencia Theatre

The second week of The Gay Musician is drawing to a close at the Valencia. This merry comic opera is one of the best that has visited the West for some time. Miss Guinan has ingratiated herself in the hearts of the patrons of the Valencia and will, without doubt, be given a most hearty welcome whenever she returns to the Slope. Lottie Kendall, and Margaret Crawford are also favorites. Harry Benham plays and acts the part of the musician with the care free inclinations in an excellent manner. That excellent comedian, Roger Gray, is one of the most potent factors in the cast and contributes not a little to the pleasantness of the production. Freda Klingel, the soubrette, dances with exceptional grace and is the possessor of an unusually pleasing personality.

Princess Theatre

The Rich Mr. Hoggenger closed Wednesday night. In Africa, one of the Rogers Brothers successes, taking its place. Because of the lateness of the date an extended review of the latter is of necessity postponed until next week. From reports that have come from those who have seen the new bill in dress rehearsals it is understood that In Africa has its full share of catchy music, picturesque settings and pretty girls. If it is as much of a success as The Rich Mr. Hoggenger it will do well.

Garrick Theatre

This notice of the Shepherd King must of necessity be short, as everything complimentary that can be said of a show has been said of the bill, Wright Lorimer and his capable company, at one time or another during its three weeks' visit to San Francisco, and to indulge in complimentary notices at this date would suggest plagiarism of others who have written up the show, or repetition by the writer. The Top o' the World comes January 2 with Bailey & Austin featured.

Bertha Darrel

Miss Darrel, who has been away from the footlights for three seasons now, attending to her continually increasing business interests, has at last felt the call that knows no resisting, and next season she will be seen in a great New York production and in the star role. Her latest photograph shows her to splendid advantage, but no picture can give any idea of the attractive vivacity of this clever young woman. In addition to nature's endowments, Miss Darrel has an exquisite taste in dressing and a large wardrobe to gratify that taste.

The Cohan Show and The Judge and Jury Bring Out the Approval of Oaklanders

For speed and action, George Cohan certainly has all other show managers lashed to the mast. His Yankee Prince, which was presented at the Macdonough, 13-14, was a revelation in the way of immediate action and promptness. Everything went with a dash and vim that was refreshing, and plainly showed the result of Cohan's careful training. The company, including the Cohan Royal Family and Tom Lewis, was the best that we have ever seen here in comedy opera. The music was of the original Cohan flavor and the songs, while not any too well sung, found immediate favor with the audience. The house was completely sold out for both performances and the production proved very satisfactory in every way. Wright Mortimer in The Shepherd King comes next and then Fritz Scheff. At the Liberty, Harry D. Cottrell and Oliver Morosco's The Judge and the Jury is being played to good attendance. The play is good and the company did well. Sidney Ayres, Robert Harrison, Henry Shumer and George Friend gave their customary fine performances and some excellent character work was executed by Andrew Bennison as the Apache Indian and William Wolbert in the role of a Mexican. Maribel Seymour, who played the lead, was hardly equal to the part. The best feminine work being done by Mina Gleason and Edith Lyle. The mining camp scene in the last act was a very effective piece of work. The County Fair will follow. William H. Thompson in The Pride of the Regiment is making a big hit at the Orpheum and is a top-notch headliner. The balance of the bill, Quinlan & Mack, the Two Bobs, Mabel Welch, Vittoria & Giorgetta, Katchen Loisset and John B. Hymer & Company completes a fine program and is drawing good houses. Brewster's Millions and the Warrens of Virginia will be two early productions at The Liberty, and Fritz Kreisler will also appear at the same house, 17. The Orpheus Club gave their annual concert at The Liberty, 14, and as is their usual wont, played to a capacity house and gave the best of satisfaction. Mrs. Nellie Widman-Blow made her first public appearance in the United States at the concert and made a tremendous hit. LOUIS SCHEELINE

Pioneer Show Printers

The Francis-Valentine Company have the largest poster printing establishment west of Chicago, and, by means of their superior facilities, have become known as the "never disappoint" house. Their posters and printing cover the boards throughout the principal cities this side of Chicago. Thoroughly equipped in every department, they are in a position to furnish everything in the line of printing for bill-board advertising. This reliable firm has been in existence for over fifty years and has contributed its part towards forming the history of San Francisco. The officers of the company are: J. M. Gamble, president; J. R. Roche, vice-president, and Eugene G. L. Hoeber, secretary and general manager. Comfortable quarters have been set aside for the exclusive use of agents and ample provision made for storing (without cost) their pictorial paper for use on the coast. The courteous treatment extended to the theatrical representatives has made the Francis-Valentine Company's offices headquarters for all the "live ones" in the profession.

Victor Morley

Not before and after taking, but before and after making up. This is the key to the picture above. The handsome gentleman wearing the summer suit and the bright smile that haunts you still is Victor Morley, the big feature of The Three Twins, before donning his war—no—grease paint. The gentleman with the college professor whiskers in the photograph is the self same Victor after the metamorphosis. That means after he has finished making up. A careful scrutiny will demonstrate the fact that Morley has teeth that befit his smile. But that is not the cause of his mirth. It is just after the ghost walked that the above was snapped, and Victor Morley with a pleasant jingle in his pocket and a reflection in his mind that San Francisco had generously rewarded his efforts to please, was in a very genial state of being—and who could blame him, especially when he confided to the writer that he was tremendously impressed with the West and would jump at the chance of putting in a season or two out here.

The Baby Arms That Stretch From Ocean To Ocean

If you want to entertain, and at the same time delight, an actor, don't take him to a French restaurant and tender him a six-course dinner. Conduct him to your abode, "Be it ever so humble," and give him a dinner "like mother used to make." If the menu consists merely of boiled mutton, with apple pie to follow, the homely fare will make your actor expand with a satisfaction which a whole French restaurant bill of fare is powerless to excite.

Why is this?—

Well, you have given him a glimpse of home, and by a strange perversity of human nature, people seem to value most what they haven't got. There's a tradition that the man who wrote the words of "Home, Sweet Home" never had a home. Few among the rank and file of actors have real homes, and as a consequence home becomes something to be dreamed of, longed for and idealized to an extent that would astonish the people who have only seen the stage from the auditorium side of the footlights.

Of course you can scarcely glance through an illustrated magazine without beholding a portrait of some famous actress pitching hay on her model farm, or some equally famous actor caught by the camera doing a "Man with the Hoe" stunt on his own broad acres. In a foot note the press agent states that the great artist pictured above retires annually to pass his (or her) vacation, and live the simple life, amid bucolic surroundings. As a rule, pet horses, dogs, cows and feathered fowls are featured in these rural pictures, but children do not seem to flourish on the broad acres of theatrical stars of the first magnitude. One reason for this is, that by the time an actor is rich enough to buy an estate, his offspring, if he has any, are children no more.

Peter Pan says, in effect, "No home is complete without a baby," and a great many actors and actresses who have no home, possess at least one requisite for housekeeping—the baby. In theory most theatrical performers hold that an artist should not marry, but one might as well try to square the circle as expect people to conform practice to theory. Propinquity, that greatest of all promoters of matrimony, is ever present in the theatrical profession; add to this a certain amount of loneliness on both sides, a mutual craving for sympathy and admiration and even the most determined exponent of the "artist should not marry" theory one day finds himself buying a wedding ring.

In the first bliss of their honeymoon, the theatrical bride and groom are apt to talk of a home, to dream of it and work harder to realize it. But next season probably finds them forced to accept engagements in different companies, and again, on each side, it is a case of loneliness, a craving for sympathy and admiration—plus propinquity—this time, with another. Is it any wonder that the Tie Which Binds sometimes proves almost as elastic as a rubber band? But the advent of a baby is apt to introduce a stronger tie. The care of the little fellow is a topic of mutual interest and delight; he has to be described, discussed and written about. Sometimes his baby arms stretch across oceans and continents, holding "Mother" with one hand and "Daddy" with the other.

So, if you want to entertain an actor, take him to your home. He will be all on the surface in a restaurant, but at your own table, in the expansion which follows a well-cooked dinner, he will look round your little dining-room with the expression which the Peri might have worn outside the gate of Paradise. He tells you that you are to be envied, and openly admires the home which you think so humble. He may even open his watch case, and show you a baby portrait, remarking, "One of these days, we are going to have a home too, for the little fellow."

The Little Ones, "God Bless Them"

FRED NIBLO, JR.—This is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Niblo (Josephine Cohan). He's his mother's boy all right, even if he does favor his father in looks.

GEORGIA ETHEL COHAN—This is the darling of the George Cohan family. She travels with her mother and family and thinks the world is just too lovely.

LESLIE AND WINIFRED WILSON FRANKLYN—They are the two beautiful children of the Franklyn family, who are vaudeville favorites.

LOUIS KELSO, JR.—The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kelso (Arling Boling.) The fond parents haven't decided whether he will be a comedian or tragedian.

SAM RYAN, JR.—You will at once notice that Sam, Jr., looks like his dad. That same sunny disposition is in evidence. Well, his dad is a good example to pattern after.

GUIDO R. DONATELLO—Being born in a musical family, he just couldn't help playing the fiddle. His father is already beginning to fear for his own fame.

JAMES GLEASON, JR.—Jimmy, Jr., is his handsome dad all over. He has two grandmothers in Oakland—one of them being Mina Gleason, the beloved character woman of Ye Liberty stock.

WILL WALLING, JR.—He was given a good start in life on the Walling ranch in the Napa foothills, and he may yet rival his stepping father's 6 foot and two inches. At present his mother, Ethel Bond Walling, is satisfied to have him just her own, small boy.

BERT HARRY McINTYRE, JR.—Has just delivered his ultimatum. He says he wants to be just as big a vaudeville attraction as his mother and father.

KITTY SUTTON—As dainty and sweet as a rose and a very, very big feature of the Sutton & Sutton, in vaudeville.

C. I. NORRIS, JR.—He is a great driver, and some day intends to rival his daddy as an animal trainer.

DOROTHY E. MACK—Well, Dorothy is a bouncing, healthy young lady. Coming of a professional family, she probably is reciting Hamlet's soliloquy or telling the orchestra leader to supply her cues on time.

GUEDA PALMER—Daughter of Bertha Darrel Palmer, at the age of 6, wearing her mother's hat. She wants to be a prima donna and has all her mother's good looks and every evidence of talent.

Prof. Warnell and His Conservatory of Music

Prof. Joaquin Warnell, the celebrated grand opera baritone, has located his studio in a beautiful building at 799 Van Ness avenue. Among our teachers none are more successful than Prof. Anrell. He has had the practical stage experience, as against the theoretical, and his professional life was a series of triumphs. In a circular he says: "During ten years of practical experience upon the operatic stages of all civilized countries in company with the most celebrated singers of the nineteenth century such as Gayarre, Tamagno, Marconi, DeLucia, Bonci, the two sisters Tetrizzini, Stahl, Kueffer, Arkel and others; during ten years of teaching in America resulting in bringing a prominent pupil before the public the writer is justified to claim that he is able to promise you and your friends thorough training from the beginning to the end of an artistic vocal education. This education does not only include proper vocal placing, tone production and all their attending technical requirements, but it includes also a thorough repertoire in opera oratorio and concert." One of his noted pupils was Fay Carrenza, who was a great success in concert and over the Orpheum circuit. In addition to his teaching, Prof. Warnell has engaged in literary pursuits and is the author of a musical treatise, The Art of Singing, that is a standard.

Caruso Insists that Cousin Caruse Shall Not Be Played at His Hotel

No longer will the popular song entitled My Cousin Caruse be played by the orchestra at Bellevue-Stratford in Philadelphia. It is strictly tabooed in compliance with a courteous but stern demand of no less a person than the renowned tenor, Enrico Caruso, himself. During the Metropolitan star's visit to the Quaker City recently he was seated in the foyer of the Bellevue-Stratford enjoying the flavor of an Havana cigarro, when the orchestra struck up the above-named song. The tenor at first paid little attention to it, but the glances in his direction on the part of several persons sitting near by prompted him to ask the name of the selection. He was told that it was a popular song that had been written in his honor. Caruso declared at the time that the music pleased him very much, so on the following day he had a copy of it brought to him. After reading over the words of the song, which is really a pen caricature of the famous opera singer, he threw the sheet to the floor, and immediately sought out the assistant manager of the hotel. He then told him that the song was distasteful, and said he would appreciate it if it was left out of the orchestra repertoire in the future. The manager, knowing that if the request was not granted the tenor would take apartments in some other hostelry the next time he visited Philadelphia, instructed the orchestra leader to refrain from playing My Cousin Caruse until further notice.

FERRIS HARTMAN underwent a slight operation for appendicitis in Los Angeles last week. He is already on the road to complete recovery and is again directing rehearsals. ARTHUR LOTTO, who has been doing advance work for the Gay Musician company for the past two years, closes with the show in Seattle next week. He will be succeeded by Mike Cavanagh, who has been acting as treasurer.

Thais Magrane

Miss Magrane is the leading woman of the Belasco stock of Los Angeles, and her success since she opened about three months ago is such that it is figured she will be detained in that city just as long as she can be persuaded to stay. There has been no dissenting voice in regard to her tremendous vogue from the time of her opening. THE DRAMATIC REVIEW has from week to week given an account of her tremendous success.

This week we give ocular evidence of the bewitching beauty of the young leading woman, and we assure our readers that the photograph hardly does her justice.

SAN JOSE, Dec. 10.—San Jose is a very busy show town just at present. This is the week when Henry Berco-vich says goodbye to vaudeville, for on Monday he will turn over the Jose Theatre to the Ed. Redmond company. For his last week at the Garden Theatre, Mr. Redmond is presenting the palpitating melodrama, Slaves of Russia. Charley Gunn, Kernan Cripps, Myrtle Vane, Anita Murray and Howard Foster are cleverly placed. At the Victory Theatre, Manager Fred Giese on Wednesday night played Geo. M. Cohan in The Yankee Prince to capacity house. At the Jose the Shubert attraction, The Man from Home plays tonight.

Butler-Nelke Academy Matinee

The first public entertainment was provided Thursday afternoon at the Butler-Nelke academy of dramatic art. A two-act comedy, Untangling Tony, by Helen F. Bagg; Martin V. Merle's one-act comedy, The Countess' Strategy, and A Gentle Jury, by Arlo Bates, were the offerings. Fred J. Butler of the Alcazar, who staged the acts and is principal of the school, made an address to the students in which he warned them not to regard a course in a dramatic school as the royal road to success. "The work done here," he said, "is merely preparatory. You are taught to think in terms of the drama, but your success in dramatic art, though founded on proper training, must be due to experience, allied with intelligence and fortified by constant study and observation." The pupils acquitted themselves well in their assumption of their roles, and a large audience was in attendance.

David Warfield Coming in the Music Master

Correspondence

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 17.—Geo. M. Cohan's Yankee Prince broke the week's monotony at the Clunie on 16. A great show and great attendance. Forty-five Minutes from Broadway plays Saturday at the Grand this week. It is a toss-up between Harry Thomson, a monologist, and Mlle. Martha, a trapeze performer, as to which is the feature. Edward Gallagher presents The Battle of Bay Rum; Lou Shean rather more than divided honors with him, as a comedy Dutchman. The Rosedale Four, a mixed quartet, pleased. Morris and Morton danced with ginger. The Pantages program this week shows Deltorelli & Glissandos, musical clowns; Coyne and Tinlin, acrobats and hand balancers; Herbert's trained dogs, and Comedy Apichino, a Sacramento lad, soloist. Billy Keene and Jessie Adams, singers and dancers, introduce an assortment of comedy, pretty scenic effects and graceful dancing. Billy is something of a comedian, and Jessie has flashy clothes and dances well. Redway and Lawrence entertain with a sketch.

VENTURA, December 16.—E. H. King, owner of the Lompoc Record of Lompoc, and Joseph Schwartz of the same place have leased the Lagomarsino Theatre and will take possession on Monday. Mr. King has leased his paper and he and Mr. Schwartz will go into the amusement business on a large scale. They have leased in addition to the Ven-

Texas Guinan

Miss Guinan is the star of the Gay Musician company, and a twinkling star she is. She is one of the most captivating stars the West has seen in many moons. She will be seen next season in a New York production under the management of Paul Liebler. Plans to this end were entered into last Tuesday. Miss Guinan has a very sweet voice and she enthuses tura Theatre, houses at Paso Robles, Lompoc, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara and Santa Paula and will have a circuit of first class shows. They may decide as well to put on a circuit of moving picture shows.

CHICO, Dec. 14.—Forty-five Minutes from Broadway comes to the Majestic 16. The Shubert attractions will play Chico, commencing with The Gay Musician on 22, to be followed by The Man from Home on January 6. The Majestic Theatre, being under the direction of John Cort, who is allied with the syndicate, does not admit the Shubert bookings, so in casting about for a playhouse the Armory Hall has been taken. The lease is made out in the name of Nick Turner of this city, who for several years has been identified with the theatrical business here, he being at one time the resident manager of the Majestic. Mr. Turner has announced that the Armory would undergo an entire renovating and that a heating plant would be installed at once. Other improvements such as opera chairs and an inclined floor will be later installed.

Minnie Allen

Miss Allen is a Canadian by birth and from an early age demonstrated an aptitude for music, both vocal and instrumental. The sisters in a convent near Montreal developed her fairly well in piano and harp playing, but she had no competent teacher for vocal study until four years ago in New York. Since that time she has devoted herself assiduously to the development of her voice and she became prima donna of the Three Twins company. Miss Allen's experience on the stage has embraced work in vaudeville, dramatic and musical comedy, and competent judges say that she can distinguish herself as a dancer, singer, comedienne or in serious dramatic roles. She regards the art of tone production above every other of her accomplishments and intends to bend all of her energies in that direction with aspirations to sing in the better grade of comic opera production. Her stage career started in a vaudeville sketch written to fit her versatility, in which she sang, danced and mimicked for a season. Then she supported Adelaide Thurston in comedy drama for three seasons, until she appeared in New York as leading woman for Walter Perkins in the original production of the farce, Who Goes There. This piece was presented afterwards in musical comedy form and Miss Allen was given an opportunity to further show her versatility by not only playing the leading female role, but also of leading the principal song numbers with her voice. It was the success she attained at this time that determined her upon seriously regarding the vocal part of her accomplishments, and when she felt that she had arrived at a fairly competent stage of advancement she accepted the role of Kate in The Three Twins, in which she is meeting with such marked success at the present time. Critics have generally said, in reviewing The Three Twins, that Miss Allen's voice is above the average heard in musical comedy.

will star under her own management. She is a very clever little woman, pleasing and natural. She has several times been prominent in big New York shows and always makes good for she is admittedly very clever.

Nina Nester

The above likeness is that of Miss Nina Nester, the miniature Lillian Russell. Miss Nester is now playing the Pantages time with her own act, which closes in six weeks, when she returns to New York to prepare for the new show which is now being written for her. Miss Nester

Harry Marshall

A clever scenic artist, long identified with the Pacific Coast, is Harry Marshall, who has just signed to paint Ed. Redmond's productions in San Jose at his stock house. Mr. Marshall has a good job and Mr. Redmond has been fortunate in securing a good artist. Mr. Marshall has served in nearly all the big houses on the coast and has painted for Henry Miller and other well-known stars.

Robert Hall Russell

Robert Hall Russell played his first engagements with Fay Templeton at the New Amsterdam Roof Garden in New York. He was with the Roger Brothers two seasons. The past two years found him with Miss Buchanan in vaudeville, during which time they have produced a repertoire of playlets, playing Orpheum, Pantages and Sullivan & Considine circuits.

Wm. Menzel

Here is a fine Tekelson & Henry likeness of Billy Menzel, who is the only live dramatic agent San Francisco ever had. He is at 915 Van Ness avenue and is there with the hustle and the reliability.

The Gay Musician is to place five interior dates after the San Francisco engagement and a treat is in store for those towns.

Oscar Walsh

Mr. Walsh is a young tenor who for the past year and a half has been winning any number of encomiums from the critically inclined of the musical world. He is a tenor of strength to the Ferris Hartman Opera Company in Los Angeles, and his popularity is well deserved, for he is the best tenor associated with the West in years. Mr. Walsh has just delighted Los Angeles music lovers with his work in The Love Tales of Hoffman, and any tenor who can meet the demands of that opera is all right in all respects. Before coming to the Coast Mr. Walsh was a recognized fine singer in Eastern operatic organizations.

Louise Mink

There is something new in prima donnas. Louise Mink, who was prima donna with Mart Singer in Chicago for a season, is a revelation. She is a different kind of prima donna. Miss Mink has a typical Grecian beauty and a well trained and sweetly effective voice. She is second prima donna in the King Dodo company, now touring the West successfully, and shares honors with the stars. Miss Mink has been associated with many big New York successes and has invariably made good. She can both sing and dance and possesses a most magnetic personality and is fast climbing the ladder of fame.

Man From Home to Play Interior

"The Man From Home" will probably play half a dozen of the Californian towns between here and Portland, including Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Vallejo, Napa, Chico and Redding. It will be one of the best plays and company which these cities have had. The Liebler name alone is a guarantee of the excellence.

Spotlights

George Best, a former member of the Kolb and Dill company, who was convicted of bigamy in Los Angeles a few years ago, will be released from prison on parole on January 2.

Valesca Suratt is the talk of New York in the production of Belle of the Boulevards. Although a very spicy affair, still Miss Sturatt is making the show a financial and artistic success. Her wardrobe is the most original ever seen.

From concert hall to grand opera is a far cry, but the gamut is run by The Singing Bandits which was given its first performance at the Garrick Theatre last night. The play is styled on the program as an operatic comedy. It might more appropriately be styled a musical potpourri, served with sauce a la Italienne. Imagine a ragout that combines the sextet from Lucia, solos and duets from other famous operas, songs of the popular fancy, comedy parodies, surrounded with lines tragic and humorous—and it can be conceived that

Zoe Barnett

Sunday night was made memorable at the Savoy Theatre by the reception accorded Zoe Barnett upon her appearance and return home in King Dodo. In San Francisco we are very fond of saying that Zoe Barnett is one of the greatest favorites ever developed locally, and we sincerely believe it, but it was never proven before Sunday just how great a favorite this little woman was. Such a reception! Such a spontaneous outburst of affection! It was tear compelling and stupefying. For fully four minutes wave after wave of enthusiasm swept over the audience to the stage, and before it was half over the little woman was almost dissolved in tears and happiness. We never expect to see a greater ovation accorded a stage favorite. Miss Barnett, whose three years of professional life has developed rapidly, is today one of our best soubrettes. She is a most enjoyable singer and a clever dancer, but far away and beyond all this she has a piquant, alluring personality that an audience instantly responds to. A great future awaits Zoe Barnett.

every fancy is reached. All this is done by a company of eight people, who, because of the grand opera flavor, take names and costumes typical of those fashioned by stage directors for the Carusos and Sembrichs. The plot is laid in Italy and relates of the trials and tribulations of a stranded opera company and the brigands who infested the Italian hill country. The action is laid in an inn, where the two factions met. The story, however, serves only to introduce the song numbers, as the singing bandits contribute some good comedy action. The singing is really good taking into consideration the versatility and ambition. The sextet from Lucia as the finale of the first act came as a surprise and a curtain encore was demanded. Thomas H. Perse has a splendid tenor voice and easy operatic bearing. Harold Reeves is a good baritone. Noble Grayson has a strong basso, while Edith Mason, soprano, made a hit

Morris Meyerfeld Talks of the Plans of the Great Orpheum Circuit

Morris Meyerfeld, the wizard who developed the wonderful Orpheum circuit, the biggest thing in the vaudeville business of this or any other country, is back at his desk after an interesting business trip through the East. When seen Thursday at his office in the Orpheum building, Mr. Meyerfeld disclaimed much of what has been published recently in reported interviews. "The Orpheum," said Mr. Meyerfeld, "attends strictly to its own affairs. It builds its own theatres with its own money, and supplies its own playhouses with its own attractions, produced by its own producing department." Mr. Meyerfeld further said that the canards concerning Martin Beck, general manager of the Orpheum circuit, were false and that the effort to create the impression that Beck or anybody else now connected with the united booking offices was dissatisfied or "at outs" with the parent concern were merely rumors circulated to injure Orpheum and United vaudeville. Regarding the coming of the new vaudeville interests, as represented by Wm. Morris, Mr. Meyerfeld said that in his opinion there was no room in the West for two big circuits, or for that matter, anywhere in the United States, and because of that belief the agreement between the United Booking Office and the Orpheum interests was in vogue and had been renewed lately. By this agreement the Orpheum activity will be confined to the country west of Cincinnati. The territory left to the Orpheum under this arrangement is a vast and valuable one and the Orpheum circuit is constantly growing. Martin Beck has just finished a tour of the South and lined up new houses in Birmingham, Ala., Nashville and Chattanooga. Other points are down for speedy consideration. As the Orpheum circuit stands today the circuit comprises houses as follows: Orpheum Theatre, San Francisco; Orpheum Theatre, Los Angeles; Orpheum Theatre, Oakland; Orpheum Theatre, New Orleans; Orpheum Theatre, Kansas City; Orpheum Theatre, Omaha; Orpheum Theatre, Denver; Orpheum Theatre, Minneapolis; Orpheum Theatre, St. Paul; Orpheum Theatre, Salt Lake City; Orpheum Theatre, Memphis; Orpheum Theatre, Sioux City. Orpheum show en route in conjunction with Majestic Theatre, Chicago; Chicago Opera House, Chicago; Olympic Theatre, Chicago; Haymarket Theatre, Chicago; Columbia Theatre, St. Louis; Columbia Theatre, Cincinnati; Grand Opera House, Indianapolis; Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville; Majestic Theatre, Des Moines; Majestic Theatre, Milwaukee; Orpheum Theatre, Evansville; Orpheum Theatre, Duluth; Orpheum Theatre, Winnipeg; Orpheum Theatre, Ogden; Orpheum Theatre, Butte; Orpheum Theatre, Spokane; Orpheum Theatre, Seattle; Orpheum Theatre, Portland; Orpheum Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.; Orpheum Theatre, Nashville; Orpheum Theatre, Chattanooga. This is a wonderful showing for an enterprise that Mr. Meyerfeld took hold of 15 years ago. It is unparalleled in the history of theatricals. Asked regarding the new Los Angeles Orpheum, Mr. Meyerfeld was not ready to disclose its location, but admitted it would be located on Broadway as the finest location in that city. A new Orpheum, to be built by John Considine in Seattle, is one of the next year's items of interest to the Northwest. The plan for reviving vaudeville at the Garrick in this city is now being developed, and this theatre will return to Orpheum acts about the last week in January.

Ben Welch

Some years ago, the Orpheum had among its performers a monologist whose name appeared in small type, inconspicuously placed. No one knew who Ben Welch was before the curtain went up on the Sunday matinee performance, but next morning all the papers were unanimous in declaring that the unknown Ben Welch was one of the big hits of the show. Since that time, he has added to his turn the character of an Italian day laborer, and in addition to his Jew, gives also this impersonation of a son of Italy. It is said that Welch has about twenty characters just as good as his Hebrew and his Dago, but as they are not demanded of him, he does not put them on. One thing may be said for him, and that is, his stuff is always new and snappy. He is no copyist, except from nature.

PRECILLA KNOWLES and Jack Bennett have decided to remain with the Lyric stock in Portland.

MACK SWAIN and his company leave today for a two weeks' engagement at the Ingomar Theatre.

H. W. BISHOP, manager of Ye Liberty playhouse in Oakland, is in Los Angeles, visiting Oliver Morosco. He may engage Blanche Hall to play leads for his Oakland house. It is quite likely, however, that Miss Hall will go east. She is now considering an offer from Vaughan Glazer to head a sixth company he is now organizing to play St. Elmo in eastern territory.

PHIL HASTINGS has been attached to the house staff of the Savoy. This in addition to the press work he directs from the Valencia. Verily, the press agent is a genius when he can straddle the fence and tell of the merits of the K. & E. shows, while at the same time he is able to declare that the syndicate is not in it—but that the Shubert shows are the real goods. But seriously, San Francisco took decided notice of the unusually brilliant press work that marked the opening of the Savoy. Phil modestly disclaims the honor, saying it was all Dick Lambert's doing, and Dick—well he says Hastings did it all. O. K. There was enough glory to divide.

The Picture People Are Clever Advertisers

VICTORIA, B. C., Dec. 9.—A moving picture of the assassination of Prince Ito at Harbin is to be used at the trial of the Korean assassin, according to the advices received from the steamer Karge Maru, which arrived here today from the Orient. A Russian photographer, who had prepared to take moving pictures of the meeting between Prince Ito and Russian Minister Kokovostoff, caught the assassination scene upon his film. The Japanese officials obtained the film, which is 500 feet long, showing every detail of the tragedy which will be exhibited in court at the trial of the assassins.

Myrtle Fischer, a member of the chorus at Fischer's Theatre, Los Angeles, and Albert Leonard, an actor, were married Wednesday of last week.

Billy Onslow has succeeded James T. Kelly as producer at Fischer's Theatre, Los Angeles.

His wounds inflicted in a recent fight with the baboon Kokomo not yet fully healed, Fred Wilson, a trainer employed by an animal show wintering in Portland, Ore., was on Dec. 9 attacked by a man-eating lion. Wilson entered the cage to feed the beast. When he turned his back the animal sprung upon him, tearing a deep gash over his eyes. Wilson beat off the lion with a meat bone, and the beast again jumped, fixing its teeth in Wilson's arm. Attendants, attracted by the noise, penned the lion in a net with hot irons.

Deas, Reed and Deas

This is a clever colored team with a big Coast reputation. These three performers have one of the best acts of its kind in the show business. The act is dressed beautifully; Mr. Reed is a clever comedian and his dancing is something of a revelation. Mr. and Mrs. Deas are well and favorably known out here. Ella Deas is a striking looking woman and dresses the act with a great deal of taste. She is possessed of a very good voice. Mr. Deas can sing and dance and is a very tasty dresser. The act has been a big hit in every house it has played, and in addition to plenty of comedy and dancing has a great finish.

Wilson Franklyn

Wilson Franklyn is credited by managers as being one of the best eccentric comedians on the American stage today. Coming from the source it does, some indication of his abilities may be estimated. He is playing the coast at present, and is supported in a sketch worthy of himself by a company that has no superior in vaudeville at the present time. Mrs. Franklyn, who is in the support, is a character woman of exceptional ability. Both of these clever people have styles of working that are all their own.

Lillian Clarke

Lillian Clarke, of the team of Harry and Lillian Clarke, is a blonde of more than usual attractiveness, and vaudeville is not slow, when it comes to good-looking blondes. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are rated as the banjoists par excellence of the stage. They have an act which is dressed in keeping with their artistic skill. Their selections are taken from the best composers. Mr. Clarke is very particular as to the kind and sort of instruments upon which he plays, and for that reason makes all the banjos used in the act.

Morris American Music

There will be a treat for San Francisco theatregoers next July when the Morris theatre, the farthest western of the American music halls, is opened to the public. Work is no progressing on the building, which Walter Hoff Seely of the William Morris Western financed and is directing. The company which is putting up the structure is composed of Western capitalists interested in the "independent" vaudeville movement, bent on installing theatres in all of the principal theatre cities of the West and Middle West. With the completion of the San Francisco playhouse the chain linking Morris in the East and Morris in the West will be complete. The new theatre will be devoted to the presentation of nothing but high class acts, which will be sent westward by Morris to sustain the fight which he is now making for his vaudeville acts, which will come into direct opposition to the Orpheum, which has been without a Western rival since its inception. The company to operate the theatre will be known as the William Morris Western, and in this enterprise William Morris himself has a financial as well as an ethical interest. The complete plans of the theatre are now being finished by O'Brien & Werner of San Francisco, who have consulted with Horn & Sons, architects of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and forty other Eastern theatres. The property in Ellis street on which the American music hall is being constructed has a frontage of 90 feet and a depth of 137.6 feet. The building will be finished in white terra cotta and will cost $250,000. A scheme of illumination is being arranged so that passers by on Market street (to which thoroughfare Ellis street is confluent) will be aware of the Morris enterprise just around the corner. To this end a huge dome covering the roof will be brilliantly lighted from within. Bronze and art glass will be employed in the construction of this dome. The fire laws existent here will be more than complied with in the fire escapes and exits which will be installed. The interior construction will provide for an orchestra floor, mezzanine, balcony and gallery. The seating capacity will be 2,200. On the orchestra floor the seats will be two inches wider than the average theatre seat and the distance between the rows will permit of easy and comfortable entrance and exit to the reservations. Comfortable lounging rooms will be installed on the mezzanine floor and a promenade will add to the airiness of the surroundings. The front of the balcony will be given up to loges and there will be twelve stage boxes. In the arrangement of the stage the purpose of vaudeville have alone been considered. It will be the largest vaudeville stage in this city. Spectacular effects will be provided for by an electrical equipment second to none in cost and completeness in San Francisco.

Robert Adams Denies He Intends to Marry

Oakland marriage license—Robert J. Adams, 33, and Anzonetta Moore, 19.

"I do not even know the girl. I did not take out the license and I have no intention of being married."—Robert J. Adams, Orpheum actor.

"The man who took out the license is playing at the Oakland Orpheum this week. He gave his name as Robert J. Adams. He is the man to whom I issued the license. I am certain that I am not mistaken."—Deputy County Clerk Cunha of Oakland. In the face of this, what is the answer?

The Selman company is making a success of the plan of playing Petaluma Monday and Tuesday, San Rafael Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, and Santa Rosa Saturday and Sunday.

Florence Bindley

There are few greater favorites, either in vaudeville or in the drama than Florence Bindley, who has shown herself to be a woman of more than usual ability. She can sing, dance, play several musical instruments, and is, besides, an artist with brush and paint. All of these things she does well. In fact, an Eastern manager said of her some time since: "Florence Bindley does all the things she does better than most people can do any one of them." The dainty little artist is appearing at the Orpheum in this city for the first time in several seasons. When last here, she appeared as The Girl in the Diamond Dress. Now she is doing an entirely different turn, a musical monologue that would tax the ability of almost any one, yet she certainly makes good with her audiences, eight to ten curtain calls a performance would indicate how good.

La Belle Italia Troupe

Which means in plain United States the troupe from beautiful Italy, are among the best musicians in vaudeville today. Not only do they play well, but they have an act that is superbly dressed, and, incidentally, they are all of more than passing appearance. Rosa La Belle is the world's greatest tambourine solist. She has a standing challenge to any one, bar none, to cross swords, or rather tambourines with her. There

Robert Hildreth

is a child in the company, but five years of age that is a perfect violinist, and whose showing of temperament is marvelous. The act is one that is unusually popular at fairs and exhibitions. Just now the troupe of five is working on Pantages time and has made a big hit all along the line.

New-York, Dec. 15.—Jealousy of a man to whom his former fiancée had transferred her affections is believed to have led Herman Klatzke, a restaurant proprietor, to a murderous attack on the man and the girl early today. Darting from a hallway in Forsythe street, Klatzke opened fire with a revolver on Max Goldberg, a theatrical man, and Lizzie Shapiro, a vaudeville actress. Four shots took effect, and Goldberg, with three bullets in his body, is believed to be dying in a hospital, while the young woman, shot in the back, is in a serious condition at the same institution. Klatzke was arrested after a chase and identified by the injured pair as the man who had fired the shots. He is being held to await the result of their injuries. The Shapiro woman is married, but has been separated from her husband, who some time ago brought suit against Klatzke for alleged alienation of her affections. The papers in the suit set forth that Klatzke is a count, whose real name is Michael Michaelovitch Barzinoff, one time colonel of the Czar's guard of honor, commander of 1000 Cossacks at Tiflis, and now chief of the Russian secret police in this country.

Texas Guinan, Star of New Show for Liebler's

THE DRAMATIC REVIEW is the first to print news of the signing of Texas Guinan by Paul Liebler for a new show—Mlle. Flirt—which he will put out next season. This contract was concluded by wire last Tuesday. Mr. Liebler has secured a winner for his list of stars, for, for Miss Guinan combines beauty, personal magnetism and ability in an unusual degree.

BEN MACQUARRIE and Myrtle Gay are playing with the Ernest Fisher company in Iowa, with headquarters in Sioux City. Miss Gayety is playing the leads and Mr. MacQuarrie directing.

The Orpheum

The Road Show next week will surpass much, if any, this week's bill that the O'Farrell street home variety presents. The colored annunciators bring on Stella Morrisini, first of all, who has a dummy act that is more than a means of getting the house seated and the latecomers quiet. She has a pack of Arabian bloodhounds that do some marvelous leaping. In passing, it may not be amiss to state that Miss Morrisini is unusually good looking, and her attractive presence does not detract from the turn. The Four Woods are acrobats and comedians well. Some of their work has never been duplicated, it is said, here or abroad. It is not hard to believe the assertion. Florence Windley, whose magnetic presence does much to make the bill popular, has an act in one this week. She plays out the piano specialty, but otherwise the turn remains unchanged. She is a sure fire-worker, and never fails to make her points, and they are many. Donald Bowles in his eighteen minute melodrama is one of the big hits of the show. His playlet is unblushingly melodramatic, but he does his work so well that the audience asks for more. There is no question but that Donald Bowles is one of those rare personalities that take their audience at sight. His support is not very long. Eva Taylor and her players are much better this week than they were last. They have a fantastic playlet, giving opportunity for much comedy, and allowing Miss Taylor a chance to present a clever burlesque of a sleep walking scene. There is a coon part played by Earl Ford that is the real hit of the piece. Harry Fox, ably supported by the Millership sisters, do what they call comic nonsense. It is aptly named. Fox is a handsome, clever juvenile who works with ease, assurance and grace. He is positive, without being pushy. The sisters Millership are good lookers, sing well, dress like-se, and assist materially in making the act go big. Carl Nobel, the Scandinavian ventriloquist, has some life-like dummies, and his voice-doubling is well done. The Klein family are cyclers. They do the old act of riding on wheels three and four high. While the idea is old, the Klein family present it with many new innovations. The motion pictures show a buffalo race in India. It is interesting and instructive.

Pantages-Central

The bill this week at the Central is pleasing. Howard and Jones, although not billed, are known in San Francisco very well. Their act is a clever sketch and both members are clever people. Jarvis, Mann and Juanda are easily the hit of the bill. Miss Mann has a very appealing personality and a pleasing voice. The boys look well and can sing. Altogether they have a neat act. Golden and Ardath in their sketch, Meeting the Comers, are first class. Mr. Arthur's impersonations of different nationalities is a clever bit of work. The act goes strong. Charles Kembling has become such a favorite at the Central that he has a contract to sing till after the New Year. W. S. Harvey, assisted by Madge Anderson in A Raven Upside Down do some wonderful stunts. Miss Anderson is a good addition to the act and works up each stunt Mr. Harvey does. Mr. Harvey has wonderful strength and has a very good act. He balances everything from a burning paper cane to a bed on his chin. Glenn Burt, the Yiddish loafer, also has a fair act. The most marvelous act in the animal line is that of Dick, the sea lion—Captain Stonewall's. This wonderful animal does everything but talk, and it seems it tries to do that. Dick runs the gamut from balancing a large ball on the end of his nose to riding a pony. He seems to understand as well as a human. The pictures are good this week and the Pantages orchestra always has catchy music.

The National

The bill this week is pleasing. The brothers Dann are clever acrobats and do some good stunts. Mr. and Mrs. W. W. O'Brien have a singing and talking act in one which is clever. Both have an unusually good idea of comedy. Nellie Burt, an old Frisco favorite, has a dandy act, and presents a novel idea. The idea of singing from a rose bower while changing is new and original. Miss Burt sings and dances well and is a very dainty performer. George H. Wood, the somewhat different comedian, has as clever a monolog as heard here for a long time. His jokes are not old and are told in story form. Sidney Deane and company, should really be George Roland and company, for Mr. Roland is the act. This chap is a comedian and a good one. Frank Willing, one of the support, has a very good voice. Why Sidney Deane has featured himself every one is trying to figure out, for he does absolutely nothing. The act is good and the people Mr. Deane has surrounded himself with are clever. Carlotta, lady champion daredevil cyclist of the world, loops the loop on a bicycle in a death-defying plunge. This is entirely descriptive of her act. Carlotta does a few stunts on the cycle before looping the loop which are clever. The pictures are interesting this week, and the orchestra is always good.

American Theatre

A most enjoyable two hours can be spent this week at the American. From pictures to the exit march each number is an entertainment in itself. To particularize, Thea Fouchon is a clever cyclist and his work pleases. Frank Clark is a good entertainer, his songs being especially appreciated. Sterling and Edwards have one of the best musical acts on this circuit. The Moores, Thomas and Stacia, are the best dressed act in vaudeville today. Mr. Moore sings a coon song better than any singer in the business. Mrs. Moore is a very stunning brunette and wears nine of the most beautiful gowns ever seen in vaudeville, each one being a creation. Her quick changes are most astonishing. Mr. Moore is himself a masculine fashion plate. Helen Beresford and company, with Ulric Collins, is a screaming funny act. It has played all over town and has achieved a hit in every house. Miss Clairmont of the company makes a hit as the French maid. We have before commented upon the cleverness of the principals. Signor J. Bergamasea has a splendid voice and his selections much enjoyed. The Pantzer Four is a clever acrobatic act. The work done by the little fellow is close to marvelous. The entire show is a success.

Maude Caswell Tells Many Interesting Things In Connection with European Theatricals

The Frenchman devotes as much energy to his amusements as the American does to his business. You can never get one to talk business at the cafe or theatre, because he is there to enjoy himself and does it to the king's taste. Everything is arranged with a view of driving away dull care and cankering worry. The French love light, brilliancy and glitter. The theatres are simply grand in their magnificence, and all their equipments, decorations and furnishings display showy effects rather than quiet colors, and the mirrors, such an extravagant wealth of burnished reflectors everywhere, sometimes covering the whole wall, presenting an appearance of an endless succession of halls. It is the same in the cafes. Mirrors to the right of you, mirrors to the left of you, and looking up you see, through the ceiling mirrors, cafe piled upon cafe, they haven't got any mirrored floors yet; perhaps they haven't thought about it. What struck me were the great wide promenades, the vestibules, and foyers on every floor of the theatre, filled with ladies in the very richest of décolleté gowns—none of the short skirt variety, but the genuine long flowing trains. With all the Parisian style and fashion gathered in these promenades one feels as though in a peacock paradise, only there the female sports the feathers. The Casino is one of the finest theatres in Paris; it is difficult to tell which is really the finest, but the Casino is like a palace of kings. Amid all its grandeur, however, there is an ordinary shooting gallery just off the foyer, and one hears the crack of rifles and pistol shots during the whole performance. This constant pistol practice is necessary in a city where there is so much dueling always going on about everything, and considerable skill is required to avoid hitting someone. One grows accustomed after awhile to the extreme décolleté worn by the ladies on the stage. I have seen some very low cut dresses worn in America, but over there a tiny handkerchief would often be large enough to cut the waist form. The play goes on until about midnight, and the crowds come and go in kaleidoscopic confusion. There is as much show off the stage as there is on it. The visitor to Paris is usually impressed with the numerous cafes scattered everywhere. There is always as much cafe outside, in the open air, as on the inside, besides they are so very accommodating; you can eat, drink and be merry, write a letter or enjoy a tete a tete without being disturbed. At night these places are crowded with well-dressed, respectable and orderly people. An orchestra provides music and the scene is one of general gaiety. The French people almost live in the open air, and even in winter Monsieur and Madame may be seen dining at a sidewalk cafe, a great charcoal stove burning nearby. There are many open-air theatres run during the summer months. Decorated with plants and illuminated by soft-colored gaslit globes, hung everywhere like strings of Japanese lanterns, they present a veritable fairyland scene. The famous Moulin Rouge was, when I first went to Paris, the same celebrated place it had been for years, but recently it has been remodeled into a fine theatre. Formerly the spacious interior was divided into sections, containing the inevitable tables and chairs, a peculiarity of French places of amusement. In the center of the vast building was a stage, where a vaudeville performance went on during the early part of the evening. Off somewhere a band discoursed music for dancing or promenading. A large switchback occupied part of the building, and little booths were scattered about where Chinese and Japanese trinkets were sold. By paying an extra fee you could see the Turkish dancing girls in another booth. Visitors wandered about listening to the music, tripping the light fantastic toe, or watching the stage performance until eleven o'clock, when the French can-can dancers appeared on the main floor, among the spectators. This is what everybody had been eagerly waiting for, and the crowd quickly gathered around, scarcely leaving them space to dance in. Sixteen girls in handsome street costumes, retaining their hats and gloves, indulged in a sort of go-as-you-please quadrille, introducing splits and high kicking. At the stroke of twelve the show is over and the visitor, who expects more perhaps, goes away a trifle disappointed, though he realizes he has seen the famous and much talked of Moulin Rouge of Paris. It is now six years since I left New York for a two months' engagement in Paris at the Folies-Maringy, and I met with such success that I remained there two years, giving me the record of American vaudevillians in having played forty-four engagements in twenty-six prominent theatres and circuses there. Counting holidays and Sunday matinees, I can say I gave 960 performances, embracing twenty-four months in all, during my stay on the continent, which were spent in actual engagements in the gay city. From France I went to Spain, thence to South America and Portugal, and afterwards to Austria, Hungary, Germany, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Belgium, Russia, Italy, Turkey, Egypt, South Africa, Madeira, Mexico, England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales and Roumania. I was in Belgium several times, but never saw King Leopold until my last trip there, and the way I encountered him was quite funny. I had just finished a fifteen days' engagement there at the Palais d'Ete and was going direct to Antwerp. I arrived at the depot very late. My train was just on the point of leaving and I rushed like mad to get aboard. The passengers were descending from an incoming train and I scarcely noticed a way being cleared by a footman in knee breeches and powdered hair. I hurried by him, nearly knocking down a tall old man walking slowly with a cane. A hasty pardon and I made the train just as it pulled out. One of my friends who had witnessed the occurrence said to me in surprise: "Maud, do you know who that old man was you ran into?" "No," I replied. "Some aristocrat, I suppose." "Only the King of Belgium," she said, to my astonishment. I was in Kiel, Germany, during the great festive week, when Emperor Wilhelm and the Crown Prince viewed the maneuvers of the German fleets. The city was beautifully decorated and it was odd to see a man on the street without a uniform. The officers of the navy and the army were the idols of the hour. I often saw the Emperor and the Crown Prince as they rushed by in their big red automobile, with its funny tooting horn. One of my most pleasant engagements while abroad was in South Africa—a twenty-one days' trip from Southampton to Cape Town. The voyage was delightful and the sea so calm the entire trip that it scarcely seemed the boat was going. Games, card parties, concerts, dances, afternoon teas, theatricals, masque balls, etc., passed the hours away swiftly. While in Cape Town I went over the grounds and home of the late Cecil Rhodes, taking many snapshots. While in Johannesburg, where I played for two months in the one house six evenings a week, no Sunday performance and one matinee a week, I had much time to see everything of interest. Of course I visited Paul Kruger's grave at Pretoria, but the most novel and interesting sight I witnessed during my stay was a Kaffir war dance held one Sunday at Langlaagte mines, a few miles out from Johannesburg. About 1500 Kaffirs participated. These half-savage negroes work hard in the mines, and most of their savings goes toward buying skins, feathers, beads and bright-colored ornaments to adorn themselves with for these war dances. These occur about once a month and last from sunrise to sunset, and they so exhaust themselves that they often fall down in fits. The war dances are divided into numerous groups, each with a leader, who carries a huge blacksnake whip to keep them in order. They are partly nude and partly covered with wild animal skins and anything showy they can get hold of. They line up and jump and hop about like mad, then each individual in turn runs out of line, leaps and jumps about, waving his spear and shield and emitting loud shouts and cries. A small band of Kaffirs furnished the music by playing on tin cans arranged like xylophones. One group called themselves snake dancers. They are attired only in a loin cloth of sacking and remain in a squatting position all through their dance, constantly whirling around and waving their arms with snake-like movements. I had given to me in Durban a complete ricksha costume. These suits are like a Marathon runner's costume, and the bare-footed negroes, with their fantastic headdress and painted legs, trot like horses pulling little sulky-like carts—taking you anywhere for six cents a mile. Well, my friends dared me to don the costume. Now, I won't take a dare, so I dressed up in it and called a ricksha boy, and borrowed his cart, and with two passengers I led a pretty lively pace for a couple of miles down the main street and back to the hotel. During the rest of my stay in Durban I never went into the street, but the ricksha boys grinned and giggled with pleasure at my appearance. The one who got me for his fare would exert himself to do fancy leaps and steps while the others yelped with envious delight.

Mlle. Pertina

Genee has a rival worthy of her best efforts. Any one who has seen Pertina marvels at her dancing. This young woman has devoted her life to the art of terpsichore and is today one of the greatest toe dancers in this or any other country. Mlle. Pertina has been the star of the Soul Kiss company during the present season and has been the one feature to uphold the show. The music of the performance was written especially for her. Her wardrobe was made by one of the most celebrated firms in Paris and designed by Pertina's mother. She has played the Orpheum circuit and was a big headline act and likewise a big success. Mlle. Pertina is an artiste from her dainty finger tips to her flexible toes. She will always be welcomed to San Francisco.

Crimmins and Gore

When people make good over the same circuit half a dozen times, it means this, either the people are unusually talented or else the act is exceptionally clever. With Crimmins and Gore, it is both. When you see these two top lined, it means that it is yours for a big laugh, one that is worth more than the admission price. This is a team that has been in the business since the time when most of the present performers were small children, running about in kilts. Rose Gore is a very striking looking woman even in her tough Bowery girl make-up. She makes a change that is the quickest on record. Crimmins and Gore have no open time, they are always working. Their comedy is good and clean.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—In dramatizing St. Elmo, which had its initial New York production last Monday night at the Academy of Music, Willard Holcolm had a double task to perform. It was necessary to make a play that would appeal to the present generation out of a novel that is old fashioned and at the same time preserve for the grandfathers and grandmothers all the romantic tradition of this one time enormously popular story. The result is a good old fashioned melodrama of the East Lynne type, which begins with a duel and ends with a cemetery repentance and wedding bells off stage. He has retained the atmosphere of the book well in some cases, for many of the lines he has taken bodily from its pages. Fay Courtenay as Edna Earl, the blacksmith's granddaughter, fully grasped the melodramatic possibilities of her part and played steadily toward that end. The cast as a whole was equal to the demands made upon it, which with the exception of the two leading characters were not excessive. Harrison Stedman was a conventional elderly clergyman; Leonora Bradley a Southern gentlewoman; Marta Oatman the lady villain, Agnes Powell, and Frederick Kerby was Aaron Hunt, the blacksmith. The piece was staged adequately and costumed and the audience seemed to enjoy it with real sincerity. *** To Charles Lecocq, now in his seventy-seventh year, sitting in his apartment in the Rue de Suresne in Paris, it must be particularly gratifying to realize that his opera bouffe, La Fille de Madame Angot, a masterpiece in its school, has just been revived within a month by the most important two opera companies in America. With Mr. Hammerstein it served to introduce his opera comique company several weeks ago. Last Tuesday night the Metropolitan Opera Company gave its first performance of the work at The New Theatre. It was evidently the intention of the Metropolitan management to give the work as French a spirit as possible by employing as many French singers as it had at its disposal. However, it is by no means easy to give opera bouffe today, even in Paris. The genre is out of date, and singing actresses like Jüdic and Aimee are no more to be found. Mr. Hammerstein was extremely fortunate in discovering Mlle. Delormes. The Metropolitan in this extremity turned to Miss Alda for the chief support of its performance. The whole performance was dominated by singers who, with a few exceptions, seemed to be absolutely ignorant of the opera bouffe style. And so, in spite of the fact that many of those who appeared were French, the performance as a whole was lacking in Frenchness and dash. Much of the dialogue was cut more than at Mr. Hammerstein's recent admirable performance of the same work, and the overture was omitted. *** Marie Tempest is back from Europe. For those who know Miss Tempest that announcement really should be enough, because such persons are fully aware that Miss Tempest is an arch and piquant person, possessed of much charm, overflowing with vitality, gifted with a strong and well trained sense of humor and in addition to all these qualities a comedienne of considerable subtlety and finesse. She is now appearing at the Lyceum Theatre in a comedy by the indefatigable W. Somerset Maugham called Penelope, which had its first American performance last week, having been brought directly here from London, in which city Miss Tempest has been playing in it for the better part of the last twelve months. Penelope has a classical sound, but be not alarmed. It is far from Greek. It is the lightest kind of froth, the kind that seems to rise from the busy brain of Mr. Maugham whenever he sees fit to agitate it. That of course is nothing to its discredit. It takes many ingredients to make up the world of theatrical art, and froth is far from being the least entertaining of the lot. But it must be real froth, not imitation, cotton wool froth, near froth. Nothing is heavier than imitation froth and the most worthy makers of the genuine thing are lamentably rare. Penelope is all about a young wife who has lost the devotion of her husband because she let him see that she was deeply in love with him. This, it appears, is a fatal error because men are brutes, and only in heaven do people want what they've got. That's Mr. Maugham's premise anyhow, whatever the fact may be. So Penelope starts out to win her lord and master back by giving him all the rope he wants by neglecting those former little attentions that had so annoyed him, by throwing him and his new innamorata so constantly together that he winds up by being bored with her too. *** Forbes-Robertson, the English actor, entertained the actors of New York at Maxine Elliott's Theatre at a professional matinee of The Passing of the Third Floor Back last week. The boxes and orchestra chairs were occupied by the Broadway stars, including Sam Bernard, Cyril Scott, Walker Whiteside, Adeline Genee, Ida Brooks Hunt, Lew Fields, Frank Daniels, John Mason, Mabel Taliaferro, George Nash, William Courtenay, Frances Starr and a host of others, and the other seats were occupied by the lesser lights of the profession. Forbes-Robertson had arranged the professional matinee at the request of John Drew, who spoke for the actors of America. Mr. Drew, by reason of the accident which he suffered recently, was unable to be present. Of course, the actors applauded the efforts of Forbes-Robertson and his associates. After the second act the applause was so long continued and insistent that Forbes-Robertson was obliged to make a speech. He said among other things: "I was not able to express to John Drew—who, I hope, will be well again and among us soon—how deeply I feel the honor of giving this matinee to this distinguished gathering of my brothers and sisters, nor am I able to express my feelings on the subject today. Some years ago the actors of New York put upon me the great honor to ask me to play Hamlet, which I did, and now you put upon me this honor a second time. We have our reward, for I think there is nothing more delightful than to play to our brothers and sisters. They are so cordial, kind and enthusiastic. They understand our failings and weaknesses, and they are always sympathetic. *** Charles Frohman has received a letter from Bernard Shaw in which the playwright announces that he has completed the manuscript of the new play he offers for production at the Frohman Repertoire Theatre, London. Mr. Shaw declares that the play will run about four hours. It is not divided into separate acts, but its author states that he is perfectly willing that the curtain shall drop at any interval desired by the audience when they express their desire in the usual way. *** January 3 will be moving day for the Patterson-Ford interests under the Liebler & Co. management. On that day The Fourth Estate, which has been running three months at Wallack's, will be transferred to the Grand Opera House, Chicago. The current attraction at the Grand Opera is A Little Brother of the Rich, a dramatization by Joseph Medill Patterson and Harriet Ford of the novel of the former. This comes into Wallack's. In A Little Brother the parts of the principals are taken by Vincent Serrano, Hilda Spong and Ida Conquest. *** The final rehearsals of the London Drury Lane spectacular success, Dick Whittington, which is now being rehearsed under the stage direction of Frank Smithson for an American production under the management of the Shuberts, will take place at the Hyperion Theatre, New Haven, instead of in New York city. There is not now sufficient room on the stage of any one of the Shubert New York theatres to set the scenes of Dick Whittington. *** The Shuberts announce that early in the spring they will make a new production for Louise Gunning. The piece selected for her use is The Glassblowers, by John Philip Sousa, with a book and lyrics by Leonard Lieblich. ROY ROY.

Back to K. & E.

A statement was issued from Klaw & Erlanger's office in New York recently, announcing that the Western Managers' Association, comprising the principal points in the States of Wisconsin, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri and Illinois, had entered into contract for a long term of years giving the exclusive booking control of their theatres to Klaw & Erlanger. This association, as has been frequently reported, is composed of those managers who last spring agreed to an "open door" policy, by which they would book attractions for their theatres without regard to their affiliations with either Klaw & Erlanger or the Shuberts. About two weeks ago an announcement was made by the Shuberts that they had given the members of this association permission to withdraw from their agreement to book directly from the New York office, because they, the Shuberts, found it impossible to send out the plays that have proved successful in New York. It was explained in this announcement that the agreement related to one-night-stand houses and did not concern the principal cities in the states represented by the association. In most of these cities the Shuberts own or lease theatres, and, naturally, such an agreement does not affect these towns. When the "open door" policy was announced last spring, Klaw & Erlanger made it plain that the members of the association need not expect any syndicate play so long as they adhered to that agreement. Without the syndicate plays the one-night-stand managers have found it difficult to bring enough first-class attractions to their houses to supply the demand of their patrons. Two or three weeks ago it was rumored that the association was ready to make some sort of terms with Klaw & Erlanger, and later came the announcement from the Shuberts. The new arrangement will mean that the towns and cities included in the association's territory will have attractions furnished by the syndicate, to the exclusion of those booked directly by the Shuberts.

Hammerstein Opera Spreads

Oscar Hammerstein of New York now has four opera companies giving simultaneous performances—one in New York, one in Pittsburg, one in Philadelphia, and his opera comique company in Canada. The bills at the Manhattan in New York began on Monday night with Le Jongleur de Notre Dame, with Miss Garden and Messrs. Gilbert, Dufranne, Lucas, Crabbe, Scott and Huberdeau. On Tuesday, Tannhauser, with Mmes. Mazarin, Doria and Messrs. Zenatello and Renaud, and on Friday evening Carmen, by Mme. Cavaliere and Messrs. Zenatello and Laskin. Saturday afternoon Mme. Carmen-Melis was heard again in Tosca, with Messrs. Carasa and Sammarco, Saturday night Les Contes d'Hoffmann was sung for the first time during the regular season. Mme. Cavaliere was the new Giulietta and Messrs. Dalmores and Renaud and Mmes. Trentini, Gentle and Duchene were in the cast.

Drew Will Be Out Soon

Charles Frohman has heard that John Drew would be out of the hospital much earlier than he expected and Ethel Barrymore sent word that she thought she would be able to begin to rehearse Mid-Channel on Dec. 27, several weeks earlier than Mr. Frohman had dared to hope for. It was only on Nov. 28 that the stork called on Miss Barrymore, otherwise Mrs. Russell Griswold Colt. The new Pinero play will be put on early in January. Mr. Drew will not be seen on Broadway again this season, but will open in Brooklyn on Dec. 27 in Inconstant George again.

Marie Cahill will be the second attraction at the New Columbia Theatre and will make her appearance in the new comedy, The Boys and Betty, the work of George Hobart.

The early appearance here of The Round Up will introduce to San Francisco the most spectacular production of a Western play ever staged in America. It has been one of the biggest of money getters and ranks with Ben Hur as a record breaker.

The Orpheum

Alice Lloyd, the English singing comedienne, whose success in New York for the past three years has surpassed that of any other European artist ever imported for the Orpheum circuit, and her appearance here next Sunday matinee will be one of the most important events of the theatrical season. The McNaughtons, who come here for the first time next week, are considered the funniest and most original English comedians that the Orpheum circuit has ever imported. The offering they will present has been widely copied without success, as their quaint and eccentric style is a characteristic of their own which baffles imitators. The boxing match which they introduce is one of the most amusing things ever seen in a theatre. Those funny eccentric clowns, The Brothers Permane, will appear in the coming bill at the Orpheum. One of the chief hits of their performance is an imitation of two nightingales making love. Next week will be the last of the Orpheum Road Show and supplemented as it will be by Alice Lloyd, The McNaughtons and The Brothers Permane, it will prove one of the greatest bills ever known in vaudeville. It certainly will be too good to miss.

Alcazar Theatre

For its holiday offering the Alcazar management has selected The College Widow, which has justly been designated one of the greatest of American comedies. It will be given its first presentation in the Sutter-street playhouse next Monday evening, and if it does not exceed the regulation seven-days' run it will shatter the confident predictions of theatric experts. Since it was written, about half-a-dozen years ago,

The College Widow has been variously presented in San Francisco, but Belasco & Mayer promise to give the first adequate production of it, both in acting and staging, that it has ever received west of Chicago. Its scenic equipment will be perfectly new, affording agreeable contrast to the dingy canvas, costumes and properties that usually arrive here after a transcontinental tour largely made up of one-night stands, and the most important character in the cast, that of the vivacious young woman from whom the play derives its title, will be acted by Evelyn Vaughan, who starred in it throughout an entire season under the direction of Henry W. Savage. In the title part Miss Vaughan earned high encomiums from the Eastern critics, some of whom pronounced her the most capable actress who ever essayed the delightful role. John Ince, who is cast for Billy Bolton, the football hero, is ideally fitted both physically and by temperament for the character. Will R. Walling will be seen as "Old Man" Bolton, Grace Travers as the athletic girl—a part in which she made a hit last season, Christie MacLean as Flora Wiggins, Charles Dow Clark as "Bud" Hicks, Howard Hickman as Professor Witherspoon and Bessie Barriscale, Adele Belgarde, Louis Bennison and all the other favorite players will be appropriately bestowed. The football players and other college boys will be genuine university men, both Stanford and Berkeley having been drawn upon to furnish the talent, and in addition to freshly-made duplicates of all the original scenic features there will be many details of staging which have never before been associated with The College Widow. The great football scene promises to be one of the most elaborate ensemble effects ever presented anywhere.

Valencia Theatre

It is a pity that California does not get more plays like The Man from Home, now being played at the Valencia Theatre and which will begin its second and last week Sunday evening. It has achieved the same great success in this city which marked its three years' run in New York and Chicago. The comedy by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, stock's with humor, and breathes the purest quality of sentiment. The theme, of course, is well known. The Man from Home shows the folly of international marriages, and casts a scorching searchlight over the methods by which American girls are bartered for foreign titles. All this is done, however, by the keenest kind of satire; snobbishness and pretension are held up to ridicule and laughed at. The four acts of the play are supposed to transpire at the Hotel Marguerite, Sorrento, Italy, and the foreign scenes afford the most picturesque sort of background to the ready, cleanly and wholesome American humor and straight forwardness in the piece, as illustrated by Daniel Voorhees Pike, attorney-at-law, of Kokomo, Indiana. The part is played by Henry Hall. He is a tall, handsome young actor of magnetic manner, easy presence and the most inimitable middle-western drawl. Charles B. Herman, well remembered here for his appearances with Warde and James in Shakespearean roles, plays the Russian Grand Duke, and Harrington Reynolds, an erstwhile Californian favorite with Nat Goodwin and T. Daniel Frawley, enacts the British nobleman. Mary Elizabeth Forbes, who was seen on the Coast last year with Lillian Russell in Wildfire, gives a spirited reading to the lines of the Kokomo heiress. Mary Moffert makes an altogether fascinating adventuress, and Bertha Welby a stately grand dame. The Man from Home is mounted with all the customary Liebler magnificence. It is seldom that a comedy is seen outside of New York with such an admirable cast and an elaborate stage setting. The last matinee will take place on New Year's day.

Savoy Theatre

The last performance of George Cohan's highly interesting and amusing musical comedy, Forty-five Minutes from Broadway, will take place this Saturday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday night the irresistible Ezra Kendall, with his twinkling eye, his slow smile and his persuasive drawl, not forgetting his sky-scraper hat, will be presented for one week only by Liebler & Company in an up-to-date revival of his most notable success, The Vinegar Buyer. Herbert Hall Winslow is responsible for the play, and it is needless to say that it is replete with Kendalisms. The scene of The Vinegar Buyer is the village of Brooklyn, Indiana, called in the play Bascomb's Corners, and the characters are more or less faithful reproductions of actual personages. The title is an odd and amusing one but it imperfectly describes the Joe Miller, the character impersonated by Mr. Kendall. Joe Miller does a lot of things in the play vastly more interesting than his business as a vinegar buyer. Really The Vinegar Buyer cuts but a small figure in the play. Joe is an all round fellow, whom all the hoosiers learn to love for his big heart, wise head and generous impulses. His life is devoted to good works, and his bump of shrewdness and knowledge of human nature enable him to overcome the schemes of the contriving, and care for the unfortunate and oppressed in a way that makes the audience glad that they are on hand to see the fun and note the sentiment. The usual matinees will be given on Thursday and Saturday. The Alaskan, the great comic opera success, will follow Ezra Kendall at the Savoy.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Dec. 18.—Tulane Theatre—The Builder of Bridges is a great play, more than that it is the dramatic treat of the season. Kyrle Bellew, Gladys Hanson, and each member of the cast scored a personal triumph. The motif of the play is the unceasing love of a sister for an erring brother, in the exploitation of which its author, Alfred Sutro, has created a story of absorbing interest. Honors are shared equally by Mr. Bellew and Miss Hanson. As Edward Thursfield, the mining engineer, Mr. Bellew has a snug role. His long and varied experience creates a clean-cut, manly adaptation. He makes an ideal lover, and combined with his fine stage presence and rare intelligence, his acting was a rare exhibition of dramatic art. Miss Hanson electrified us last year as leading lady for E. H. Sothorn. This year, as Dorothy Faringay, she gives us an opportunity to praise her abilities more than ever. Womanly through and through, her beauty and strong feminine personality dominate her every movement and completely captivate her admirers. Doubtless Miss Hanson realizes her witchery and the effects of her rare dramatic power. What delightful moments were experienced when Mrs. Thomas Whiffen was on the stage; the dear old lady was unctiously entertaining and we hated to see her leave. Although the role of Arthur Faringay was not sympathetic, Eugene O'Brien won recognition by strong individuality. Frank Connor was also strong and virile as Walter Gresham; Ernest Stallard was more than satisfactory as Peter Holland. Next week, Mrs. Leslie Carter; 28, The Merry Widow. Crescent Theatre—Geo. Sidney in his new vehicle, The Joy Rider, is playing to his usual big business. The supporting company is strong and a number of catchy songs and an attractive chorus make up a most agreeable advertisement. Next week, The Squaw Man; 28, Ward & Vokes. NOTE.—I desire to say that Mr. Bellew was born in 1857 and is therefore now 52 years old. His many friends on the Coast can therefore discredit the startling announcement of a local paper that he was 65 years old.

W. L. McCONNELL.

TUCSON, Ariz., Dec. 15.—David Warfield played an unusual role here this morning when he figured with David Belasco as defendants in an attachment proceedings brought by a local theatrical manager who claimed $360 loss on account of a cancelled date here Tuesday. Warfield was personally served with papers. After a short delay, a settlement was effected and the actor's baggage was released. A delay of fourteen hours getting into El Paso caused the cancellation of the local engagement.

LARAMIE, Wyo., Dec. 15.—The Opera House had Valley Forge booked for the 14th, but for some reason they did not put in an appearance. The two picture shows, O. K., under the management of Fred Cameron, also the Lyric, management of T. McKenna, are doing excellent business now. We have had more of the better class plays here this year than for some time before. The Man of the Hour, Man on the Box, Girl Question, and Sunny Side of Broadway being some that have been here. The Elks Lodge had one home talent play, The College Pennant, which drew big houses both nights.

CARSON CITY, Nev., Dec. 24.—Carson Opera House (C. H. Peters, mgr.)—Man on the Box, Dec. 28. Lake Theatre.—Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Tyrrell have purchased the share formerly belonging to Don Hayes and will do much to add to the popularity of the little theatre. Mrs. Tyrrell is a capable pianist and Mr. Tyrrell is one of the best amateur dramatic players Carson City has ever had. They will introduce new features beginning shortly after the holidays. Miss O'Brien sings the illustrated songs and sings them well, possessing a clear, true voice and excellent enunciation. A. H. M.

CHICO, Cal., Dec. 20.—The Gay Musician, the first of Shubert attractions, plays Armory Hall (Nick Turner, mgr.) Dec. 22. Jan. 7, Man from Home comes to same house. Ezra Kendall, booked for Majestic Theatre, 23, cancelled.

MARYSVILLE.—On Dec. 17th, Geo. M. Cohan's musical play, Forty-five Minutes from Broadway appeared at the Marysville Theatre.

"Kid" Burns, the plain, every day good fellow, won the applause of the audience and the rest of the cast was good. Manager Atkins believes in booking the best attractions on the road and always has a full house. Pantages vaudeville, a clever show, played Saturday matinee and Saturday evening. The Tyrolean sextette was a pleasing act and the Roman ring artists were clever entertainers. Pantages appears here again on Saturday, Dec. 25th, for two performances—Saturday and Sunday evenings. Sunday evening, Dec. 19th, Laura Hudson and company opened a four nights engagement with Three Weeks, for the first night, and will also produce Are You An Elk, Sapho, and the Devil. This is the first time Laura Hudson appeared in Marysville and she certainly made good. Besides being pretty, she is an emotional actress and is ably supported by twelve capable artists. MARCUSE.

WOODLAND, Cal., Dec. 14.—The Woodland Opera House is passing through the most prosperous season of its career. Such good attractions as The Girl Question, The Time, Place and The Girl, Fifty Miles from Boston, The Land of Nod, the Persse-Mason Opera Company and The Spoilers have been recent high class attractions and most of them have played to over $500.00. The Laura Hudson Company played here two weeks ago and left a reputation for fine work that will crowd the theatre upon their return. The Lion and the Mouse, The Wolf, Max Figman and other big attractions are booked.

PORTLAND, Dec. 20.—BUNGALOW—(Calvin Heilig, mgr; William Pangle, resident mgr.)—Three first class attractions were offered at this theatre the past week and two of them were stars of the first magnitude. The plays offered were The Man of the Hour, The Vinegar Buyer and the Yankee Prince, the latter two being headed by Ezra Kendall and George M. Cohan, respectively. The Man of the Hour did a fine business considering that it was the third visit of the play to this city. The company was good and compared favorably with its predecessors. Ezra Kendall in The Vinegar Buyer came the 16th and was the same as of yore, one of the best of our droll comedians, as one of our local critics said he was the logical successor of Sol Smith Russell. Last night the big noise of the theatredom opened his engagement, George Cohan, and was greeted by a big house. It is a great many years since Cohan has been here, the last time being, when he and his parents offered Running for Office. Since then he has gained fame and money, for the reason he dishes up just what the American public seem to want. True, he is not the playwright Chas. Hoyt was, but his offerings seem to please and bring big dollars to the box office, and many of them, and that eventually is the test of success. He lived up and proved to us that his dancing was the acme of perfection. His support included his father and mother, but his sister, Miss Josephine, was lacking, and Lila Rhodes is filling her place, and did acceptable work. Tom Lewis seems to be as well liked as Cohan, and in a part patterned after his Unknown in Johnny Jones he was perfectly at home. The chorus is the largest we have had this year, and the production is perfect. Coming—Dec. 23rd: William Crane in Father and the Boys. BAKER—(George Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—A Girl at The Helm is the Christmas week offering at this theatre. It opened to packed houses yesterday. There is a good plot to this musical comedy, dealing with the love of a rich man's daughter for the manager of an automobile garage, and the girl being seeking in marriage by a foreign nobleman. It is the desire of the girl's father for her to marry the nobleman, and on the promise of the latter to win a boat race for the father, and his ultimate defeat, the girl becomes the wife of the auto manager. Billy Clifford is featured in the production and the audiences seemed to like him. Marguerite De Von plays the daughter and won all by her creditable work. A feature of the play is the male singing chorus, which comes pretty near being the equal of anything along that line we have had. Coming—Primrose's Minstrels, 26. PORTLAND—(Russell & Drew, mgrs.)—This theatre reopens with Christmas matinee with The Gay Musician. ORPHEUM—(John F. Cordray, mgr.)—All kinds of variety and novelty were on the bill the past week at this theatre, and no complaints could be registered from vaudeville lovers for lack of entertainment. Alice Lloyd was the headliner and this English comedienne came pretty near being the candy. Her costumes were attractive, and her songs were of that class that makes one commence keeping time with their feet. She is one of the very best headliners we have had at the Orpheum since its coming to Portland. Another English act, The MacNaughtons, kept the audience well keyed up in the mirth line throughout their entire time on the stage. Their slap-jack comedy was good and fresh. Other acts making good were La Tosca, the talkative juggler, and Permaine Brothers. This week's bill includes—Underwood & Slosson, Basque Grand Opera Quartette, Zanettos, Frank Tinney, Belle Davis, Donovan & Arnold, and Fox & Foxes Circus. LYRIC—(Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—A comedy of unusual merit, A Bachelor's Honeymoon, is the bill for Christmas week at this theatre. Will D. Howard and Priscilla Knowles are playing the leads this week, and between them, with their marital complications, they succeeded in creating many a good laugh. Sidney Payne in a German role is to be commended for a faultless presentation of the part. Dorothy Davis and Effie Johnson did well in minor roles, as did Edward Lawrence, George Walling and Jack Bennett. Next week—The Squaw Man. GRAND—(Frank Coffinberry, mgr.)—For this week Manager Coffinberry has the following acts: Albers-Polar Bears, Yola Yberri, Hill & Syllivamy, Three Keltons, Les Jundits and Fred Bauer. PANTAGES—(John Johnson, mgr.)—The following acts are offered for this week: Princess Irene and her lions, Four Dordeens, Mills & Moulton, Three Musical Millers, Gaines & Brown, and Leo White. A. W. ## Ferris Hartman Has His Stage Hands and Musicians Union Donate for Aviation Week in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 22.—Funds for aviation week were noticeably increased through the benefit given Thursday by the Ferris Hartman Company. Stage hands and musicians' union by donating their services, added to the receipts. Blanche Hall has been offered an engagement as leading woman of Ye Liberty Stock Company, Oakland, and has accepted. Miss Hall has just celebrated her fifth anniversary as leading woman with the Burbank Company. In a letter received by John Burton of the Burbank from William Desmond, he tells of meeting Mr. and Mrs. Ginn (Maude Gilbert), who are with Jim Hackett. Superintendent of the L. A. Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals discovered the little instrument of torture that made the Howard Musical Shetlands, appearing at the Orpheum, "musical," and made the owner cast aside some whips tipped off with needles, prods from which made the ponies jangle their bells. Early in January, Harry Girard will produce and manage for the Gamut Club, a comedy entitled Angel Town, written by several members of that organization. Next to fall in line in the new curtain movement, is the Burbank, and needless to say it is a distinct improvement. Still the fight goes merrily on among the Theatrical Treasurers. Now they are playing tag with a date for "the ball," and each organization is striving to have "my party" first. Calvin Heilig, president of the N. W. Theatrical Association, was a visitor in Los Angeles, conferring with Oliver Morosco regarding plans for the Majestic in the booking line for this season. The Hartman Company loses a valuable member in Oscar Walch, who has stepped out of the company, owing to some trouble over the role he was cast for in Belle of New York. With Mr. Walch goes his wife Elvia Rand, also one of the company. It's great to be an orphan this week, as they are being royally entertained at several of the houses.

AUDITORIUM—This house is dark this week.

BELASCO—Are You a Mason is being revived by the Belasco people and to go is to laugh. The members of the company seem to be imbued with the Yuletide spirit and things go with a snap and a bang from start to finish. Owing to several previous performances, this farce is a familiar one to local playgoers, but still the funny lines thrown over the footlights bring back the laughs. Mr. Appleby as the staid old married man of Rockford gets himself beautifully tangled up as one of the "pretended" Masons, and Frank Camp as his son-in-law, and the other sinner, shows his ability along the lines of comedy. Dick Vivian's female impersonation is well done, both as to lisp and French accent. Charles Giblyn returns to the company after a long illness, as the farmer from "back home," and makes the part most laughable. Howard Scott contributes a clever piece of work as the music hall usher with ambitions, who insists on reciting the tale of the "Jabberwock" in a screamingly funny manner. Ida Lewis, in her most severe manner, portrays the mother-in-law, and Miss Gardner is the puzzled wife of the principal character. Jessie Norman's Irish cook, with a brogue broad enough to walk on, is a delightful piece of work. Are You a Mason? by the Belasco Company makes a most appropriate bill for the holiday week.

BURBANK—St. Elmo is in its third and last successful week, and as a curtain-raiser, Harry Girard sings a one-act opera, Santa Claus, which was written for Mr. Girard by Harry Rowe-Shelly. It is a dainty bit of a story told in music, and is laid in a Catholic orphan asylum, where the children have been told there will be no presents. Santa Claus makes a visit, however, finding one wee waif, who couldn't believe he would pass them by. As he gives from his pack, one side of the room becomes transparent and we see the chapel with the sisters singing. Mr. Girard's delightful baritone is heard to the best advantage, and little Ollie Waters plays the part of the child with rare understanding, carrying her share of the music in a charming little voice as tiny as herself. The chorus of nuns is made up of Mr. Girard's pupils, who interpret their part of the score finely.

MAJESTIC—On Christmas day, The Top o' th' World opens at this theatre, and continues through the ensuing week, when it will be reviewed.

MASON—Again David Warfield brings us The Music Master, and again are we thankful and made better for the visit of this tender little play. The old music master, whose search for his wife and babe brings him to New York, where for sixteen long and weary years he lives in suffering and privation, shows David Warfield in all his wonderfulness. With the utmost care of a genius does he draw this picture of Von Barwig, so subtle, so pathetic in its simpleness, and big in its humaneness. That wonderful art of leaving so much "unacted," just living it, as it were, makes David Warfield's performance one that will not soon be forgotten. Messrs. Aramini, Gaillard and Niemeyer afford the gayety of the cosmopolitan household. Mr. Eagle as Stanton, and Mr. Boug as Cruger, Sr., are satisfactory. Marie Bates gives us a delightful picture of the old English gentlewoman, who clings to her New York, as she knew it. Miss Dunbar is a graceful and pleasing Helen. As a pure delight, long may The Music Master live.

GRAND—Most appropriate for the holiday season is The Toymaker, with its Christmassy atmosphere, and its music so bright, tuneful and full of joyousness. Ferris Hartman's Johannes Guggenheimer, owner of the wonderful doll, is one of his very best characterizations. Walter De Leon, who plays the lover of the "doll baby," scores deservedly. Walter Catlett, as the gay old beau, is as funny as Hartman himself. Joseph Fogarty helps to carry the fun, as Count Ballenberg. Josie Hart is an excellent Frau Gretchen, and who could be so dainty and bewitching as the doll, but Muggins Davis. Charles Farwell Edson makes his debut with the company as Brother Mathew, and his well-trained bass voice shows to advantage. The work of the chorus deserves special mention, as they sing with spirit and finish. After the opera, Mr. Hartman gives a very pretty "Christmas finale" in How Santa Claus Was Caught, which proves a delight to the children both on and off the stage.

ORPHEUM—Although peace and good will are abroad in the land, The Devil and Tom Walker are holding the stage at the Orpheum. A comedy, with scraps of music, a chorus of six pretty girls and plenty of fun, yet, underlying all this is a good, wholesome bit of philosophy, and also a dash of pathos. John Hymer is Tom Walker, a Tennessee nigger, who is given charge of hades, while His Majesty makes one of his frequent trips to New York. Tom metes out to all the "visitors" their punishment in a way that makes this bit of fantasy one of enjoyment. Ben Welch, a standby when it comes to good things, brings his Yiddish humor and his Italian impersonation to add to the enjoyment of this good bill. Compared with his Jew, Mr. Welch's Italian falls short, and does not ring true. Fraulein Katchen Loisset, "does" some songs, and whose well-trained pigeons serve to introduce "Honey," a wonderfully ugly bull pup. Honey submits to being a "quick change artist," and shows us how much he can look like an Irishman, a German sailor and a tramp. While a large share goes to the dog, this is one of the cleverest acts seen for some time. Vittoria and George-ette dance with their arms, and box with their feet, both being funny and well done. This week Edwin Stevens and Tina Marshall are presenting a little play entitled Guardy, which is one of Mr. Stevens' own productions, and is a witty, dainty bit of comedy. Other holdovers are Howard's dogs and ponies, Milt Wood and the De Haven Sextette.

LOS ANGELES—The wild exhilarating dances of the Russian, are one of the pleasures of this week's bill. The Godlewsky Troupe, with pretty and tasteful costumes, dance with zest and grace, and a dash of savagery that is simply splendid. Ernest Pantzer, a nimble dwarf, and four grown-ups do some clever acrobatic work. Morris and Morton execute some good dancing and pass off a few "minstrel comicalities." Dick and Alice McAvoy offer up several varieties of Bowery slang in a sketch called Herald Square Jimmy. Dorothy Dahl, in character studies and songs, is strongly suggestive of the music hall. Helen Beresford and company present Ulric C. Collins' comedy sketch, Polly's Surprise, a well-written, but rather broad playlet. New motion pictures fill out a very good bill.

FESTER'S—Billy Onslow returns to his own in The Wrong Senator, immediately making himself as popular as of old in the part of a jovial Irishman, who, through an election bet, enters the home of a woman, well known for her social ambitions. All goes merrily until the husband arrives, and then there is a very funny duel. Frank Morton scores as the jealous husband, and Esco Ives, another new-comer, has several fine solos. Nan Halperin is bright and vivacious, and Annie Bauman, as the charming, ambitious matron, sings her several songs exceedingly well. The chorus do their usual good work.

OLYMPIC—The Billikin Man is proving a winner, as Chas. Alphin's latest and best. The billikin is owned by a sausage maker, who, through its influence, has accumulated wealth, and is threatened with disaster in event of its loss or his daughter's marriage. Of course it is stolen, and thereby hangs the tale. Dave Morris plays the mysterious Mr. Mop, who steals the billikin, and shows his versatility in an entertaining manner. Jules Mendel as the sausage maker is excellent. Leonard Brisbane cleverly acts an English lord, and Walter Spencer has several fine solos. A bathing number with a diving-board, so arranged that with the aid of electrical effects it appears as though the girls were actually diving in the water and swimming about, is a distinct novelty. Blossom Selev leads this song, and Laurel Atkins and Maude Rockwell are both well cast. The chorus is well costumed and helps to make this a great success.

UNIQUE—Grit, by the Earl-Rauworth Company is scoring heavily this week for the first production. This is a stirring melodrama dealing with both sides of life and tells of three waifs in New York City and their battle for existence. Mr. Earl as a tough newsboy shows his ability to draw a character part, and Mr. Spencer is also good in a similar role. Miss Fellum in the leading role proves satisfactory, and Della Earl as a newsgirl wins a warm welcome. Mr. Cramer gets a round of hisses from the audience as the villain, and Miss Rauworth as the French adventuress is seen at her best. The vaudeville numbers consist of Miss Earle in a specialty, and the Smilletta trio in some clever work on the triple bars. Motion pictures and illustrated songs fill out the bill.

The Valencia Closes

Following next week's performance of The Man from Home comes darkness for the Valencia, and presumably an end to the Shubert season on the Coast. Letters and telegrams have both failed to elicit any information as to what shows the Valencia might expect, so Manager Lissberger has posted the closing notice. The future of the Valencia is not known, and probably will not be determined upon until after New Year's. J. Charles Green and his associates have faced a very costly campaign with their fine theatre, and have borne their contributions without a murmur, and it is to be hoped that such magnificent losing will be repaid before many months have passed.

Personals

The Laura Hudson Company return to town next Monday.

Joseph Brooks has engaged Digby Bell to play the principal comedy part in George V. Hobart's new farce, The First Night, in which Lillian Russell is to appear in Philadelphia at the Broad Street Theatre on Christmas night. Mr. Hobart's latest effort is an adaptation from the German, Der Halbe Dichter, by Rosen. Miss Russell has had it arranged for future use, but the demand is so strong for a farce that it was decided to bring it out at this time. In addition to Digby Bell, the following people will appear in support of Miss Russell in The First Night: Julius McVicker, Sydney Booth, Albert Andruss, Geo. E. Mack, Ben Turbett, Susanne Westford, Millicent Evans, Leonora Oakford and Saidee Williams.

Correspondence

SAN BERNARDINO, Dec. 22.—Tonight at the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, mgr.) will be presented 'The Top o' th' World,' with Bailey and Austin as leading comedians, and the advance sale promises a crowded house. 23, The Spoilers; Christmas night, the dramatic portrayal of life in the Canadian woods, 'The Wolf.' The Girton stock company at the Unique is being received with increasing favor, with change of play semi-weekly; the present offering is 'My Friend from India.' The Man from Home was presented by the Shuberts at this house, 16, to a large audience. The play was exceptionally well staged and mounted, and the cast was excellent. Olga Nethersole, in Sapho, will be at the Wyatt, Redlands, Christmas night, and a goodly number of lovers of the drama have signified their intention of taking the ten mile trolley trip from here. This will be Miss Nethersole's opening night in California, and she will be in Los Angeles all next week. J. E. RICH.

SAN DIEGO, Dec. 22.—GARRICK—(Jack Dodge, mgr.)—David Warfield appeared here for three performances Dec. 17-18 with a special matinee on the 18th, and did big business. Artistically this is one of the best productions that has ever showed here. The supporting company is excellent, and the piece is staged with great attention paid to every little detail. The Henry McRea players appeared here in 'The Spoilers' Dec. 19-20. The Spoilers is an appropriate name for the company, and it is the earnest hope of the theatre-goers here that they never come back. The Three Twins will play a return engagement Christmas, matinee and night. Jan. 1—Cousin Kate. Jan. 3—Olga Nethersole in Sapho. ISIS—(Sam & Lee Shubert, lessees)—Dark. Harry Lauder and big vaudeville company will probably be the next attraction. Date indefinite as yet. PICKWICK—(Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—The Charles King Stock Company are scoring a big hit this week with an elaborate production of Leah Kleschna. Crowded houses are the rule every performance. Miss Rambeau in the title role plays her part well and is convincing. Chas. King as Kleschna the burglar has a clear conception of the role, and gives universal satisfaction. Pietro Sossio, his pal, also does good work. This week marks the first appearance of John Thorne as leading man. Mr. Thorne as Paul Sylvaine is convincing and has a good address. He will strengthen the company considerably. Auda Due and Frank Bonner also aid materially to the success of the piece. Next week, Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall. QUEEN—(John Donnelan, mgr.)—The Queen has a good bill this week and is composed of the following acts: Edna Davenport, singing comedienne; The Labakans, comedy acrobats; Harry & Kate Jackson in comedy sketch, 'Cupid's Voyage'; Bella and George Stelling, hat jugglers; motion pictures and Peerless orchestra conclude. GRAND—(Calmy & Lebovitz)—R. M. Campbell, owner of the Pacific Coast film exchange at Los Angeles, has purchased an interest in the Grand Theatre from Calmy & Lebovitz, and hereafter this house will be supplied exclusively for San Diego with films handled by Mr. Campbell's firm. LUNDQUIST.

OAKLAND, Dec. 23.—Everybody is shopping these nights, as a consequence of which light houses prevail at all the theatres and to still further aggravate matters there is not a particularly strong attraction at any house. Bishop's players are presenting 'The County Fair at The Liberty.' It is a good play but has been played here several times, at this house, and consequently has been seen before by a great many of the Liberty's regular patrons. George Friend as Aunt Abigail Prue is the whole show. He has played the part many times and as the prim and prudish old maid, kept the audience in a state of frenzied laughter. He is given excellent support by Walter Whipple, Robert Harrison, Harrison Ford, Clarence Elmer, Robert Lawlor, George Rand, Maribel Seymour, Edith Lyle, Claribel Becker and Bessie Sankey. The County Fair will continue for the balance of the week and will be followed by 'The Admirable Crichton.' The Shepherd King, a very appropriate melodrama for this season of the year, is playing to light houses at The Macdonough. Wright Lorimer, the leading man of the company, is a very capable actor and gives an excellent interpretation of the title role. The company was satisfactory in all respects. Fritz Scheff will appear for one night, 27, and then King Dodo for a week. David Warfield is also booked. At the Orpheum, Florence Bindley is the one best bet and the clever little lady is just about the most versatile actress that we have had here for some time. She is perfectly at home at singing, dancing or playing musical instruments and keeps the audience applauding during her entire act. Donald Bowles, who for quite a period was a member of The Liberty stock company, also came in for a good share of applause. Eva Taylor appeared to good advantage in a new sketch entitled, Jones-Smith-Carey. The balance of the program, Stella Morrisini, Quinlan & Mack, Wm. H. Thompson, The Four Floods and The Klein Family, were also in keeping with the Orpheum standard of attractions. Sidney Deane & Co. are the top notchers at The Bell, and present a singing stunt that is very enjoyable. They all possess good voices and use excellent judgment in their selections. Elizabeth Stewart, a native of San Francisco, and a former member of T. Daniel Frawley's company, will be seen in the cast at The Liberty next week. Texas is in preparation by Bishop's players. LOUIS SCHEELINE.

SEATTLE, Dec. 30.—MOORE—A very successful week's business was done by The Alaskan, which ended its engagement at the Moore last evening. Thursday George M. Cohan and his royal family will appear in 'The Yankee Consul,' and from all appearances will be greeted by crowded houses. His stay is limited to only three nights and a Christmas matinee. ALHAMBRA

F. P. SHANLEY, Manager, formerly manager Hotel St. James.

—Dark. GRAND—As a holiday offering we have 'The Land of Nod' at the Grand Theatre, which will prove acceptable to both young and old. The company representing it is better this year than last, and last night's record was one of the largest crowds of the season. Many old friends greeted Neill McNeill, the "April Fool," who was last seen here as Kid Conner in 'The Red Mill.' SEATTLE—The Russell & Drew company are making a success of 'The Girl Engineer,' Charley Taylor's thrilling melodrama. The hero, Joe Thorn, is well taken by Verne Layton, who has returned to Seattle footlights. LOIS—A Gilded Fool is produced by the D. S. Lawrence players. The stage manager has succeeded in expressing the time of the period by an old-fashioned interior, which is extremely effective. ORPHEUM—Beginning Monday, Arturo Bernardi, Italian protean artist; Una Clayton in 'His Local Color'; the Chadwick Trio, with Ida May Chadwick; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Voelker in 'Twilight in the Studio,' the Four Readings, equilibrists and flying leapers; Dagwell Sisters in a song cycle, and Hopkins and Axtell, entertainers, contributed the bill.

MAJESTIC—At the Majestic, Joe Boganny Troupe of Acrobats; the Columbia Four in a comedy musical repertoire; Al W. Fremont & Co., in 'The Way of the West'; Charles Emerald and Maude Dupree, London Music Hall Artists; the Four Dancing Belles; Probst, the whistler, and the motion pictures make up the week's bill. PANTAGES—The bill at Pantages Theatre is headed by the Mysterious Mirma, the diving queen. In Spokane last week, Pantages Theatre scored a record business with Mirma, and the crowds were so great that several extra performances had to be given to satisfy the demands. Other acts are Wills & Hassan, equilibrists; Pearson & Garfield, in comedy and song; MacLean and Bryant, in a sketch called 'Ootsey'; Payne & Lee, with Miss Lee appearing as 'The Dancing Billiken'; Helen Lowe and the Pantagescope.

E. MORGENSTERN.

Coming of Olga Nethersole

A dramatic event of exceptional interest and importance is announced in the coming of Olga Nethersole. Miss Nethersole holds a unique position in literature as well as in the drama, for aside from occupying a foremost position upon the English-speaking stage, her literary achievements are rated among the best in advancing sociological and psychological reform, as well as in supporting the anti-tuberculosis movement. Last May in New York City before one of the largest gatherings of the sociological society she delivered an address on 'Life Is Our Right and Labor Our Privilege,' in which she disclosed elaborately and effectively reasonable and pertinent solutions to such great problems as tenement house reform and sweat shop redemption, the relative attitude of capital to labor, and an eloquent appeal for a uniformity in the divorce laws. Miss Nethersole has been for years probably the most misunderstood woman before the public, attributed solely to the fact that her efforts to disclose life as it is, rather than as it might be, revealed a realism in dramatic art that staggered the prosaic and provincial critics of the drama. But with a persistency and positive deliberation that is characteristic of her as a woman as well as an artiste, she has converted many of her severest critics, who now proclaim her the greatest English-speaking actress before the public. Her coming to the Van Ness Theatre for the week commencing Monday night, Jan. 10, is heralded with pleasure as it is an assurance of a histrionic treat worthy the consideration of all those who admire a wonderful performance by a wonderful woman.

In all probability 'The Top o' th' World,' which will introduce to us Bailey and Austin as musical comedy stars, will be the last Gottlob Marx & Co. attraction at the Garrick. It is expected that the New Columbia will then be able to house this firm's stars, while the Van Ness is to play the bookings that are now being offered at the Garrick.

Nat Nazarro & Co.

The above cartoons are of Nat Nazarro & Company in their Herculean Novelty act at the National this week. There are four people in this act, and each one has an equal chance to show his ability. A little story is told in this act, which is clever. This is the best dressed act of the kind ever seen here. Other acts on the same order have played here, but none were quite as clever as this. The act is worth the price of admission, and will be in town four weeks. If you want to see a good, neat act, see Nat Nazarro & Company. The smaller part of the act is a very important member and very clever. Mr. Nazarro has taken great pains with the two little fellows and their work is marvelous. Mr. Nazarro's work is very artistic, it doesn't look like work, and some of their stunts are new to 'Frisco. Don't miss this act.

Nat Goodwin Through With Nevada Mining

Admitting that he saw more than $1,000,000 slip from his grasp in his Nevada mining ventures, Nat C. Goodwin, when seen last Tuesday at his seaside home at Santa Monica, said he had washed his hands of mining enterprises in which there is an element of stock speculation. "I do not mean that I have lost interest in mining," said Goodwin. "I still have money invested in Alaskan mines. Although I have given up all my Nevada holdings I still believe the mines are good. It was stock speculation which disgusted me with the Nevada game. Had the operations there been confined to legitimate mining I would not have become dissatisfied. I do not mean by this to criticize any of my associates. They did all they could to protect holders of stock in the various Nevada companies in which I was interested. They spent thousands and thousands of dollars in their efforts and did not stop until it was a choice between bankruptcy and discontinuing the buying up of the stock that was thrown upon the market."

Fatal Row Breaks Up Theatrical Company

Maben, Miss., Dec. 18.—Manager Evans of a theatrical company traveling out of Memphis was killed and five others injured in a free-for-all fight today. The manager, who, it is said, had been drinking, struck Rock Johnson over the head with a pistol and shot Harry Johnson, Rock's brother. The latter wrenched the weapon from Evans and shot him through the forehead. The Johnsons and five members of the company were arrested. Three of the injured are women attached to the show.

Reno Theatre Burned

Reno, Nev., Dec. 22.—A manager and actor burned out in Reno, by fire which started in the rear of the Wheelman Theatre, Reno's leading theatre, where all the combination shows play. The fire started at 8:40 and is burning today. It completely destroyed the theatre and the Catholic church which has just been completed at a cost of $82,000. The manager of the theater, Ray L. Brown, and James Bradford, an actor working at the Grand Theatre, are walking the streets with one suit of clothes and an overcoat. Manager Brown had his apartments upstairs in the front portion of the theatre, where he and Bradford were making their abode. Neither one knew of fire eating up his possessions till after it was too late to save them. But they consider themselves lucky by not being asleep at the time of the fire. The Sanford Dodge Company was billed to play here next Sunday. But, alas, it's a story to repeat about the beautiful sunset which turned out to be the op'ry house on fire. Their advance man's trunks were just inside of the front door and a large package of paper to be put up this morning. All was saved except one trunk. There is no place to play combination shows here until the Nixon-Aylesworth Theatre is finished, which will be two months and a half. The stock company and moving picture houses will prevail. The theatre damage is estimated at $40,000. No insurance.

H. R. JONES.

Musicians' Union

At the last meeting of the board of directors of the Musicians' Union, some twenty-odd members were initiated. Two members were reinstated and one application filed. The Union made a second donation of $50 to the Portola Festival Committee. A committee was appointed to select new headquarters.

The Achievements of Thais Magrane

THE VERY remarkable and remarkably beautiful picture of Thais Magrane that appeared in our Christmas number last week, has excited great interest in that clever young actress and we have had many requests to publish some particulars of her career. To begin with the present, Thais Magrane is the leading woman of the Belasco Theatre Company of Los Angeles. Miss Magrane went to the Belasco organization last September and instantly jumped into popular favor for the positive excellence of her portrayals. The assignment of parts that this brilliant young actress has had during her Los Angeles career covers a wide range, extending from the big, powerful emotional moments of David Belasco's play, Du Barry, to the lighter type of stage endeavor, as exemplified in Are You a Mason? Miss Magrane's artistry is marked by much authority, conscientious effort, and an intelligent grasp of the character she is interpreting, together with a keen appreciation of the values of stage technique. The Belasco company has had many popular and clever leading women, notably Amelia Gardner, Eugene Thais Lawton, Florence Oakley, Lillian Albertson, and Florence Reed, but none of these well known actresses has pleased the Belasco clientele more than has Miss Magrane. There is a deft feminine touch in all the work that she does and she has endeared herself most emphatically to the woman patrons of the Belasco Theatre. Miss Magrane has the reputation of being one of the best dressed women of the American stage. Some of the gowns that she has displayed on the Belasco stage are veritable revelations of the dressmakers' art—saratorial creations that are masterpieces. It will be welcome news to the Los Angeles readers of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW to know that Miss Magrane has a contract with John H. Blackwood, manager of the Belasco Theatre, that calls for her services until the first day of next July, when, it is announced, Miss Magrane will go East to assume the principal role in a Broadway production. One of the most important achievements that will be placed to the credit of Miss Magrane during her Los Angeles engagement will be her appearance Monday night, December 27, in Gertrude Nelson Andrews' new play, Through a Window. In this play, which is founded on the San Francisco earthquake and which is given at the Los Angeles Belasco Theatre for the first time on any stage by Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks, Miss Magrane will have the role of Felipa Costello, the daughter of a San Francisco judge. It is a role in which her talents as an emotional actress will have full scope for exploitation and it is a chance that comes to the lot of few stock leading women to have such an opportunity, especially when the production will be made under the personal direction of the author of the play and will be viewed by Joseph Brooks of the firm of Klaw & Erlanger, who will come to Los Angeles from New York City especially for the purpose. Prior to her engagement as leading woman with the Belasco Theatre Company, Miss Magrane occupied a similar position with stock organizations in Chicago, Cleveland, Providence, R. I., and Philadelphia.

Personals

AILEEN MAY opens with T. Daniel Frawley as leading woman in Winniepeg next Monday, in The Girl of the Golden West.

GODFREY MATTHEWS, who has been winning laurels as leading man of the Laura Hudson Company, closes with that company tomorrow.

MRS. OSCAR LEWISOHN, who as Edna May before her marriage a few years ago carried London by storm by her demure impersonation of the Salvation Army girl in The Belle of New York, after living at Biarritz for some time has now returned to the vicinity of London, where she entertains charmingly. She is a keen first-nighter at all important productions.

PRINCE ROBERT DE BROUË of Paris, whose marriage to Estelle Alexander, the American singer, in Chicago, was annulled by the French courts in 1907, has made his debut as an actor, under the pseudonym of Starlio, in a comic opera at Nice, France. He has been taking singing lessons from a French professor, whose daughter, according to report, he shortly will marry.

MRS. WILLIAM WINTER JEFFERSON, known to the comic opera stage as Christie MacDonald, has sued her husband, who is a son of the late Joseph Jefferson, for divorce. The suit was filed at Buffalo, N. Y., and has been placed in the hands of a referee. Mr. Jefferson is now touring the Southern States in a repertoire of the plays made famous by his father, while his wife is with Andrew Mack's company. They were married in May, 1901, at the Jefferson seaside place, Crow's Nest, Buzzard's Bay. Europe was visited on the honeymoon, and for some time thereafter Mrs. Jefferson quit the stage. Later when they found that they were incompatible, she returned to her work. Last July the fact that they were living apart became known, but at that time it was denied that a divorce was contemplated. It was reported that one source of domestic trouble had been Mrs. Jefferson's desire to live with her relatives, while the husband preferred a household of his own.

Al Watson-Otis Laurelle

These two well known figures in Western theatricals have joined their interests and are now located on the fourth floor of the Milbank building, directing The American Theatrical Exchange. They will furnish club talent, and have already worked up a vaudeville circuit with Mr. Laurelle in charge. Now, Mr. Watson, who is an old time dramatic man, will have charge of the newly created dramatic bureau, which will supply actors and companies. The firm has had much experience and should meet with great success.

Actors and Scenic Artists of Australia Face Weary Christmas

Melbourne, Nov. 2.—Christmas festivities have from time immemorial been associated with much feasting, much merry-making, and much kindness, and poor indeed was the man who could not look forward to some little pleasures for himself and family at such a time. To the actors, the scenic artists, costumers and others associated with theatres the season was regarded as one indeed of joy, for no matter how few in number the engagements were during the year, the advent of Christmas brought the joy of hard work, good money, and the manifold blessings that follow in the train of happy and contented minds. All is now changed, and the streets of every city in the Commonwealth hold men and women belonging to the theatrical profession, harassed looking and fearful of what the future will bring forth. They are workless, without a hope of employment in their own profession, and, as the holiday season grows nearer, the more distant grows the possibility of work elsewhere. It is a pitiful position these poor mummery men are in, and when one reads of the vast sums of money won from the public by big guns like Oscar Asche it is sad to realize that his prosperity spells starvation to the local actor. And yet this is so, and the fault is not with Asche, but with the public, who like all things in the theatrical line with the brand of England on them, and it thus follows that great theatrical stars bring with them from England actors and actresses to play parts that could be played far better in many cases by Australians. Then there is the scenery and dresses—all British or French products, and, strange to say, admitted into the country without paying a penny duty. "Why should that be?" inquired a well known scenic artist the other day, and receiving no reply, continued, "If there had been a stiff duty on scenery, every scenic artist in the Commonwealth and many assistants would have been hard at work on the royal productions for Christmas; as it is we have had no work, or are likely to get any. There is absolutely no reason," he continued, "why the scenery should not be painted in Australia. No one denies that we have the men here competent to do it, and yet it is becoming the rule now for touring companies from England to bring all their scenery with them. It is cheaper, of course, but it is not fair in a country that protects its manufacturers and their employees against outside competition by stiff duties on their products, to allow the poor scenic artists to shift for themselves. It is the same with the costumers. Theatrical dresses are made in London and Paris, and not here, with the result that people in Melbourne and Sydney who lay themselves out for this class of work are workless." This was the sad plight of a scenic artist—a man whose work is known all over Australia. Previously at this time of the year he has been hard at work with his assistants preparing for the Christmas attractions. This year he is hard at work scheming to earn money to pay his rent and feed his children. The scarcity of work amongst theatricals is not surprising, when one realizes the enormous popularity of the moving picture shows with the public. In Melbourne alone there are no fewer than eight big picture shows between Bourke street and the Yarra bank. In addition to these, every suburb has shows of lesser quality, but sufficiently attractive to draw the sixpence and threepence away from the exponents of drama or comedy, as the case might be. In the country districts the same thing obtains, and so badly have theatrical companies been supported as compared with the cinematograph entertainments that many companies that were on tour this time last year have been disbanded and the members "resting." What then is to become of stock actors if the present rage for cinematograph entertainment continues? Their occupations their means of earning a livelihood. The younger ones will in time break from the ranks of the mummery men and obtain less congenial but more profitable work in more prosaic walks of life. But the older ones, whose whole lives are wrapped up in the theatre, and whose training and Bohemian tendencies have unfitted them for other work! What is to happen to them? Are they to starve? Many are close to starvation now, and when Christmas Day arrives, unless something is done to help them, the poor actors' Christmas, instead of being merry, will be about as cheerful as Christmas Day in a workhouse.

Nance O'Neil Finally Conquers New York

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—All of the New York papers agree that Nance O'Neil, the California actress, has at last received deserved recognition as one of the world's greatest emotional actresses. Her acting in The Lily, produced by David Belasco at the Stuyvesant Theatre tonight, aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. At the end of the third act the curtain had been run up 27 times in response to repeated cheering.

Abe Cohn Goes East

THE DRAMATIC REVIEW caught a very strong intimation this week that Abe Cohn, of the American Theatre of this city and The Bell of Oakland, would on Wednesday next, leave for Chicago, and in all probability would immediately arrange for the building of a fine theatre, in which he and a couple of Chicago capitalists will be interested. Other eastern houses will also be built. In all probability Mr. Cohn's family will soon follow and make their permanent home in Chicago. Mr. Cohn will be a success in the East. He has been a great big success out here. The American will be directed by Ed Homan, who is interested in all Mr. Cohn's theatrical ventures.

Mrs. Alexander Marquardt, a harpist, wife of the assistant director and first violin in Nahan-Franko's orchestra, of New York, and formerly a resident of this city, has been rejected by the Musical Union as not sufficiently competent a musician for admittance. Their decision was made after a trial performance. Mrs. Marquardt has played in New York with Damrosch and Seidl, and with Thomas at the World's Fair in Chicago. She was for ten years a member of the Musical Union in San Francisco.

Van Ness Theatre

The second week of the Fritz Scheff engagement will end tonight, when the volatile little singer, who heads the company, will start east, via Oakland, Salt Lake and Denver. The holiday shopping has hurt the business of the week, which is not up to the first week's. However, the enthusiasm of the audiences is just as great and the company's work is thoroughly enjoyed.

Princess Theatre

In Africa, the new offering which went on last week, is just about on a par with the vehicles that have been seen here for weeks past. It is amusing, bright in lines and possesses a fund of melody. Kolb & Dill have a brace of good roles and they manage to get all the fun out of them that is possible. Maude Lillian Berri, the prima donna, scores a great hit nightly with her delightful solos, and the other capable members of the company do good work. The scenery and costumes are as good as any seen locally, and the spectacular effects are many and varied. The piece abounds with catchy, whistleable hits and will run next week. The work of Sydney de Gray, Olga Steech and Carlton Chase is of the most commendable kind.

Valencia Theatre

Have you seen The Man from Home this week? Well, if you haven't you have a real treat in store and only next week to take it in. It's a pity that San Francisco does not get more plays like The Man from Home. Liebler & Co., whose productions for years in California have been the criterion by which many others have been measured, have never sent a finer play or better all-round organization to the Coast. The comedy, by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, sparkles with humor, and breathes the prettiest sort of sentiment. The theme, of course, is well known. The Man from Home shows the utter folly of international marriages, and casts a scorching searchlight over the methods by which American girls are bartered for foreign titles. All this is done however by the keenest kind of satire, and snobbishness and pretension are held up to ridicule and laughed at. The four acts of the play are supposed to transpire in the Hotel Marguerita, Sorrento, Italy, and the foreign scenes afford the most picturesque background to the ready, cleanly, wholesome, American humor and straight forwardness. The title part is played by Henry Hall. Mr. Hall achieves wonders in the role. He is a tall, handsome young actor with a wonderfully magnetic manner and an easy presence. His inimitable middle western drawl won the hearts of his audience from his first entrance, and he was called before the curtain many times and compelled to make a speech in which he didn't lose his character for a second. Mr. Hall is an artistic and finished actor. Chas. D. Herman, well remembered in California for his appearances with Warde and James in Shakes-perean roles, played the Russian Grand Duke with the air of a royal personage. His performance was more than artistic and pleasing and he presented a very fine make-up. Harrington Reynolds, an erstwhile local actor with Nat Goodwin and T. Daniel Frawley, enacts the British nobleman quite satisfactorily. The part of Mariano, played by Albert Roccardi, is in capable hands. One would hardly expect such a small part could be made so prominent as Mr. Roccardi makes the part. That beautiful girl, Mary Elizabeth Forbes, who is known in artistic circles as Harrison Fisher's poster girl, gives a spirited reading to the lines of Ethel Granger Simpson. Emma Meffert, Countess de Champigny, makes a stunning and fascinating adventuress. Bertha Welby, as Lady Creech, is a stately grande dame and plays her part very cleverly. It is seldom that a comedy is seen in this city with such an admirable cast and an elaborate stage setting. In fact, The Man from Home is all and more than was expected.

Alcazar Theatre

Vigorously embodying the frontier life it represents, Pierre of the Plains, the melodramatic stage story made from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, is a most satisfying play. There is the regulation melodrama thrill in the piece—a knife duel in the third act which intently held the audience. John Ince is the hero, and Will Walling, the villain, and they have a fight and roll over, groan, gasp and do a wrestling match, and the villain is thrown over a precipice. It is interesting while it lasts. The play tells the story of a halfbreed Indian, his life and his romance. Guided by the turn of a card, ignoring trouble, trusting to fate, this half-white is a character who directly appeals to the audience. And when Pierre sinks his knife into Jap Durkin, the villainous member of the mounted police, he has the sympathy of the house. John Ince as Pierre shows the volatile spirit of the Canadian frontiersmen, and his make-up is true to the demands of the part. He handles the dialect most skillfully. Will Walling gives a strong portrayal of the rascally guide and enemy of Pierre. E. L. Bennison is immense as Peter Galbraith, the father of Val and Jen (Miss Vaughan). He has the physique and the voice for the role. Miss Vaughan has practically the only feminine role and she fills the requirements admirably. Christie McLean is a squaw, and plays the small part well. The scenery is elaborate.

Savoy Theatre

Musical comedy of the Cohan brand has been drawing large audiences to the cosy Savoy Theatre this week. Like most of Cohan's offerings, Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway consists of all schools of the drama, rolled into one, in tabloid form. From melodrama to the most airy comedy; from tear-extracting pathos, to show girl displays, the versatile Cohan flits rapidly, always leaving his audiences guessing. Does one's taste run to drama of "The Villain Still Pursued Her" type, one gets it in Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway, where the wicked Daniel Cronin pursues Mary, plots with Mrs. David Dean, an adventuress, and where Mary turns on the phonograph as Cronin robs the millionaire's safe. Does the theatre-goer like to laugh hilariously, he simply can not resist the tribute of laughter when Kid Burns introduces his Broadway jargon to the simple denizens of New Rochelle, and anyone who does not laugh with the kid has to succumb to the riotous party given by the new millionaire in act II. On the other hand, people who like homely sentiment are touched and gratified by the plaintive ditty, Mary Is a Grand Old Name, and So Long, Mary, is, as usual, the hit of Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway. One might as well try to dissect a pousse cafe as attempt to analyze a Cohan show; the events just happen, and they come at such a clip, with such a riot of humorous dialogue, funny characterization, catchy music and, last but not least, color and movement, that spectators simply cease to think—they just sit back and are entertained. Of course, in order that spectators may reach this beatific state, it is necessary that the rendering of the performance be as rapid and sure as Cohan's play. The company at the Savoy leaves nothing to be desired in this respect—from the leading character to the smallest role, the performers are sure fire all through, not a cue is faked, not a line is stumbled over. The performance speaks volumes, not only for the performers, but for the stage management. As Mary, Elizabeth Drew gives a charming interpretation of Cohan's remarkable housemaid; Charley Brown, as Kid Burns, plays ably up to Miss Drew, and keeps the laughter going; Eugene McGregor, as the millionaire, sets a new pace for nimbleness; James H. Manning, as Cronin, is a villain to the manner born; Louise Gardner is a very pleasing little ingenue, and Ninon Ristori, as the Adventuress, is enough to strike terror into the heart of any prospective-in-law; Susan Chisnell, by repetition of one line: "Poor old Castleton," keeps the house laughing through every act; Harry Gwynette is a dignified butler, and all the other roles are well played, while the choruses show careful drilling and the staging and costuming are excellent. The Savoy Theatre is decorated in red, white and green—the Italian colors, probably in compliment to the fact that the white cross of Savoy figures so prominently in Italy's flag, the reigning family being of the House of Savoy.

Bernhardt Writes Play Which is Practically a Failure

PARIS, Dec. 23. At the Theatre des Arts last evening Un Cœur d'Homme (The Heart of a Man), a play in four acts by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, was produced. The plot follows: Paul Sarnois, an author, about 35 years old, has married a young and delightful person, Sabine. After a few happy months, Paul's romantic spirit leads him to fall in love with his wife's own godmother, a person in the forties. Mme. de Valreal resists the young man's attentions until he runs away and consoles himself with a demimondaine, who, it seems, is her exact counterpart. Then she sends for Paul in the secret hope of inducing him to return to his wife. The result is brought about, but not as Mme. de Valreal planned, for the wife discovers her with her husband. Mme. de Valreal as a result commits suicide, while the young couple become reconciled. The comments of the Paris papers were unfavorable.

Emil Clarke and Fred Snook have organized a musical comedy company and will open in San Rafael, Jan. 3, with Petaluma and Santa Rosa to follow.

The Vinegar Buyer

An old friend in up-to-date vestments is to be welcomed at the Savoy Theatre next Sunday night when Ezra Kendall reappears in the best of his laugh producers, Herbert Hall Winslow's The Vinegar Buyer. The new vestments are provided by Kendall himself, and are composed mainly of brand new jokes and comedy which he has been working up for some time past. As everybody knows, he wrote those excellent joke books, Sport, Good Grief and Hot Air, that almost everyone knows by heart. The author is now accomplishing comedies and cartoon sketches. The last sport scene and number in his last act, this already bought comedy, which, in its old form was one of the funniest of many seasons, and is now guaranteed to be as full of laughs as a mine is full of holes. In fact, Kendall has been quoted as saying that the old principle of a "laugh a minute" was not good enough for him. If he could not give his audience at least six full belly laughs in a forty-minute act, he'd consider himself unworthy of the salary he drew.

To make sure that The Vinegar Buyer has accumulated no kinks with age, Messrs. Liebler & Co., who again manage Kendall, put the production under the personal supervision of Edward E. Rose, dramatist of David Harum and one of the best stage directors of the profession. In every respect the production has been made, in as painstaking a manner as if the play were about to make its first bow to Broadway, and an excellent company has been engaged. Julia Stuart will be Mr. Kendall's leading lady, and he will be aided in his quest for laughs by Robt. V. Ferguson, Emily Wakeman, Lottie Alter, Frank Lyon, John Garrick and the famous old Kendall hat.

The Orpheum

This is Orpheum Road Show week, and of course the usual big attendance is in evidence. By a strange perversity of fate, which no manager can figure on, the two big acts which are supposed to be the acts, and which are advertised accordingly, do not equal in public tribute the success achieved by two minor turns. We refer to La Titcomb, the buxom lady in white tights on horseback, and Ida O'Day in the little play, A Bit of Old Chelsea. La Titcomb's act is beautiful and interesting, through some magnificent lighting effects, and her singing is fair, and Ida O'Day's portrayal of the little flower girl, while dainty and artistically presented, is not particularly appealing to a vaudeville audience. Hyman Meyer's act, The Man at the Piano, is one of the big hits, and Mae Melville and Robert Higgins, who have an absurd line of talk and burlesque, are a screaming hit. The pretentious animal act, A Night in a Monkey Music Hall, is unique and pleasing, and a real novelty. Fay, The Two Cooleys and Fay, do a black face turn that is funny and wins great applause. The smaller of the two men is distinctly a fine black face comedian. Carl Nobel, the ventriloquist, and Harry Fox and the Milership Sisters are interesting hold-overs. The regulation pleasing pictures are also seen.

Pantages-Central

There are two acts at the Central this week that are worth two dollars of anybody's money any time. One, in particular, is Eddie Redway, who was the star of Gingerbread Man last year. Eddie is a comedian—a real one—and has a style all his own. Eddie is a clever dancer, and as he himself terms his act, "He's gabbing in one," and he's a scream. He has good stuff, sure-fire, and is the real hit of the bill. Gertrude Lawrence (Mrs. Redway) is a very stunning woman, with "Nell Brinkley" eyes and style. Mrs. Redway is making a bit hit singing Junie McCree's latest song, Take Me Up, Up, Up. Herbert's dog and cat family are marvelous. Mr. Herbert has trained these animals to do everything but talk, and it seems sometimes they do that. The act is of great educational value. Keen and Adams are very clever English society entertainers. They have pretty settings and a good act. Deltorelli and Glissendo, comic eccentric musical clowns, have a splendid act if you haven't ever seen the originals, Dixie Brothers. Jas. R. Walters, character singing comedian, has a fairly good act. Coyne and Tinlon, hand balancers and acrobats, have a splendid act. Chas. Kembling has made such a hit with his songs, he has been engaged for ten more months. The entire bill is good and worth going to see.

The National

The show this week has more real acts than it has had for weeks. Hoey & Mozart have a fair turn, Miss Mozart really being the act. Her dancing, for the little she does, is clever. Gertrude Everett is talented and sings pleasingly. The Bohemian Sextette have the prettiest and best singing act ever playing this town and it's a shame with such an act to spoil the effect with soiled wardrobes—the cleaners should get busy. This defect is very noticeable, otherwise there are three great male voices and three excellent female voices. The soprano has a beautiful voice, she is pretty and presents a charming appearance. Leon Rogee, the Human Orchestra, is clever and his imitations are wonderful and would be enjoyed much more if the expression on his face were a bit more pleasing. The real hit of the bill, however, is Nat Nazarro & Company, in a distinct Herculean novelty act which is a novelty. This act is well known in the East and has achieved as big a name as any act of its kind. The dressing is attractive and each one gets a chance to show what he can do. Nat Nazarro is a man of fine appearance and carries himself like a gentleman of distinction. His work is neat, there is no exertion and he has two little fellows that he has trained so carefully that they never miss a trick. The act is the acme of refinement in acrobatics. Myrtle Byrnes & Company have a sharp-shooting offering. Miss Byrnes never misses, and her stage settings are beautiful. She wears medals for championships from all parts of the world. The act is a success. The pictures and National orchestra are very interesting numbers.

The Wigwam

Von Mitzel & Maynard, with their dandy sketch, one of the cleverest on the circuit, are seen here this week. Mrs. Von Mitzel is a stunning woman, and Mr. Von Mitzel also makes a fine appearance; both can act and are very natural in their comedy work. Josephine Gassman and her picks are a big hit this week. Miss Gassman has no equal in coon singing. Her act meets with great favor everywhere. The Rusticana Trio are making their usual hit. Tom Linton and his Jungle Maids are still showing the people the goods. The act is clever. Max Duffek, the "Mad Musician," is good. Inza & Lorella, the clever jumpers and acrobats, are still making the people sit up and take notice. This act is by far the greatest act of its kind ever in San Francisco vaudeville.

The American

The Christmas bill at the American is an excellent one. The Rosedale Four have improved their act, and their voices are splendid. More chance should be given Miss Miller to show her voice; it is good enough any time for grand opera. The Two Shetlands bill themselves as "America's greatest dancers," this, however, is not true. These two little girls are clever, dress their act well, and do their songs exceptionally well, but they should do more coon songs and cut out the dancing entirely. Bell & Caron are the hit of the bill. Mr. Bell is a tumbler and acrobat who is hard to beat, and if you want to see some good work and have a real laugh Christmas, go and see this act. Both are clever people. S. Wm. Sheerer's name was not on the program, but the possessor of the name made good with imitations and violin playing. Harry Thompson

Walter Duyrea

The above likeness is Walter Duyrea, who played here a few weeks ago with Eddie Foy. Mr. Duyrea has retired from the cast of Mr. Hamlet of Broadway to better himself. This promising young man has a future. He has a good voice and is a decidedly clefted juvenile man. Mr. Duyrea expects to come to the Coast next season in stock. He has quite a flattering offer to do so, and as he is a fine looking, well groomed young man, his presence would be an acquisition.

Vaudeville Notes

The Lilliputian Village, now one of the features of Paris life, is a living dream, and as one wanders around this toylake city with tiny houses, horses no larger than dogs, and coaches that bring to mind the transformation of the pumpkin, and the little people themselves, one feels like a giant, who in his wrath, might crush any one of these midgets with the uplifting of a foot. The queen among the 300 mites is undisputedly the Countess Magri, or as she is more generally known by the public as Mrs. General Tom Thumb. This little woman is today, after fifty-one years of life behind the footlights, charming the Parisian public and the hordes of tourists from all countries by her sweetness of manner and natural charms. Just as in the days of our mothers and grandmothers, the celebrated Lilliputian, who has reached the age of 68, is as marvelous as ever. Age seems to have touched this lovable little creature very lightly. Her hair still retains its dark brown color, and although she is stouter than she was, her buoyancy and sprightliness of step are those of a young woman or rather of a child.

The city attorney has advised the police commission that it could grant a permit for the establishment of a kinteoscope parlor at 1752 Polk street in spite of the proximity of the First Presbyterian Church in Washington street, and despite the ordinance prohibiting such places of amusement within 200 feet of the front of any church or school. City Attorney Long held that the law contemplates contiguous frontages, and as the sides of the two structures have a greater separation than 100 feet, the prohibited interval, that the commission could award the permit.

Jim Post, who has had a very successful season in Arizona, returned to San Francisco last Tuesday.

Personals

ONE OF THE saddest of all things has occurred to mar Elizabeth Drew's Christmas. She received a wire early in the week, saying her mother was dying. Miss Drew deserves credit for her bravery in playing out the week at the Savoy, and the sympathy of all professionals in town is with her.

L. W. EDWARDS, who is pretty well known on the Coast as an advance agent, and whose last job was ahead of Lena Rivers, has just emerged from the shadow of rather a harrowing experience. Friday night of last week he was coming out of the American Theatre, when he was accosted by two plain-clothes men, who, despite his explanation and letters and telegrams, insisted on taking him to the Central Police Station and holding him as a "suspect" in the investigation of the footpad who has been terrorizing the city. On Sunday the wise sleuths released Edwards without any apology or hardly any explanation. Sometimes the zeal of our detectives is little short of assinine, and there doesn't seem to be any redress for the victims.

ADELAIDE KEITH, the sister of Mrs. Al Watson, who has won a distinct place in the West for herself as a sou-brette of ability, was married on December 10th to James M. Tripplett, who is one of the Coast League baseball players. The young couple completely surprised their friends, who did not imagine there was any romance developing. Mrs. Tripplett is a dainty, charming little woman, and for the future her home will be in Los Angeles. The present week, which finds her at the Portola Theatre, will be her last professional engagement.

IF ANYONE wants to know the number of friends Zoe Barnett and Louise Mink have, just take a peek into their apartments at the St. James. These two popular members of the King Dodo Company have connecting apartments, and between the two rooms one would take the place for anything but sleeping rooms. The rooms are bowers of flowers, candy, fruit and Christmas gifts. Among the many handsome gifts, Miss Barnett was presented with is a diamond and pearl heart, while Miss Mink's most beautiful remembrance is an opal and pearl ring.

JAMES K. HACKETT played Samson to the "gallery" the other night in Milwaukee, but it was such a "gallery" as few actors have ever had the chance to play to. Mr. Hackett gave his first performance of the Bernstein play under the auspices of the Milwaukee Press Club. It was announced that all applicants for seats by mail would be given the most desirable parts of the house in the order in which their applications were received, and that the club members would take what was left. When the time for receiving mail orders expired it was found that the orchestra and first balcony had been completely applied for. This left only the top gallery for the members of the club who sat there with their wives and gave Mr. Hackett the most remarkable reception of his career.

TOM PHILLIPS has signed to go in advance of Ben Dillon in The Irish Prince, under the management of Charles Pryor.

The Lambardi Grand Opera Co., greatly augmented and presenting a brilliant repertoire, will be one of the early attractions at the New Columbia Theatre, corner Geary and Mason streets.

The Pryce Mackaye Company of tabloid players who have been operating in Vallejo close tomorrow night.

could not escape, being burned to death before the eyes of his child wife, Dolla Estep, who could see his death struggles through a small aperture. His wife was terribly burned in her efforts to rescue her husband, as was Samuel Craft, ticket seller at the American, who tried to liberate the burning man. Estep, who was 41 years of age and a resident of San Francisco, had been doing a turn in magic, but was running the Santa Claus pictures today while the regular operator was sick.

Symphony Orchestra May be Formed

Amalgamating themselves with the California Promotion Committee a score of the leading citizens of San Francisco have come out openly and directly for the proposition of having a symphony orchestra in this city and have pledged their subscriptions and support toward the successful fulfillment of the project. This fact was brought out at the regular weekly meeting of the reception committee of the California Promotion Committee held at the Fairmont last week, when it was decided to join forces and work together. The California Promotion Committee has been working for a symphony orchestra here for the last few months. At the same time individual citizens were engaged in a similar effort. The two bodies recently became aware of the endeavors of each other, but on doing so immediately decided to amalgamate.

New Production by New Theatre

Since the New Theatre opened in November, five productions have been made, the last being Sheridan's The School for Scandal, which was given for the first time by the New Theatre company last Thursday evening before a brilliant audience. Of the plays presented three have been modern and two classical, leaving seven more to be produced this season. Of the dramas to come three, Don, The Bluebird and Beethoven have been announced. The first named is by Rudolf Bresier and the second by Maurice Maeterlinck. It is likely that early in the new year a Shakespearean presentation will be made. The School for Scandal was enacted by a notable cast. Instead of using the costumes of a period antedating the play, as is usual, the garb worn was that of Sheridan's time—1777. This served to emphasize the lifelikeness of the delightful comedy and make the performance more pleasing to the eye. The architecture of the rooms, moreover, was true to the period. That the cast is of unusual strength may be inferred from the fact that Grace George played Lady Teazle; Rose Coghlan that of Mrs. Candour, and Thais Lawton that of Lady Sneerwell. The Sir Peter was Louis Calvert; the Sir Oliver, E. M. Holland; the Charles Surface, Matheson Lang; the Joseph Surface, A. E. Anson; the Crabtree, Albert Bruning, and the Sir Benjamin Backbite, Ferdinand Gottschalk. Miss George will remain with the organization while the play is kept in the repertory, after which she will resume her tour.

The Man From Home

Liebler & Company no longer need a press agent for The Man from Home. In fact, the proposition is now up to them to engage William R. Hearst for an ad-writer. William J. Bryan to make railroad contracts and ex-President Roosevelt, himself to wield the "Big Stick" as manager of the company. All of which is occasioned by the speech made by the Hon. Jos. G. Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives, at Vincennes, Ind., during the late presidential election. The Grand Opera House was packed with the biggest rally of the campaign and the demonstration which greeted Uncle Joe lasted for fully fifteen minutes. During the applause this eminent statesman's eye wandered from side to side and accidentally rested on a large pictorial poster by one of the boxes, showing Daniel Voorhees Pike as he will appear in the great production, The Man from Home, which will be seen at the Opera House. When the vast audience had finally ceased its applause Mr. Cannon pointed to The Man from Home and praised the production as being the best he had ever witnessed. He related how friends had induced him to go to see this great play by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, during its long run in Chicago and after he had seen it, pronounced it in his opinion as one of the greatest plays ever produced. He dwelt particularly on its being an Indiana story by an Indiana author, and urged everyone to see it. Whenever a famous man like this indorses a production in such a manner it is certainly complimentary to Liebler & Company, the producers of this remarkable play. Mr. Cannon's closing remarks were, "After seeing The Man from Home, I said, 'that's good enough for me to see the second time,' and I did, and I will see it the third time if I ever have the opportunity."

Margaret Dale, who has not been here since her appearance with the Henry Miller company at the old Columbia Theatre, will make her appearance in support of Wm. H. Crane, when the new Columbia opens on Monday, January 10th.

A double force of decorators are at work upon the interior decorations of the new Columbia Theatre and already the progress is such as to insure the completion of the work well in advance of the date set for the opening of an Francisco's new leading theatre.

The Advance Agent's Dream

One night an agent dreamed a dream and dreaming, dreamed he died,
And straightway to the pearly gate his sin-stained spirit hied,
And there he stood with downcast head and low;
"My record's pretty rank," he said, "I guess I'm booked below."

"I've smoked a lot and drank a lot, confess it all I must,
And flirted too, and then besides, Great Heavens, how I've cussed."
The good Saint Peter looked at him with kindly, smiling eyes,
But shook his head, "Don't ask," he said, "a mansion in the skies."

But let me ask some questions: Sir, were you an agent on the road?"
The sinner lowly bowed his head, and these words from St. Peter flowed:
"You've gotten up at four a. m. and chased the train a mile,
Amid the train crew's jibes and jeers a sounding all the while,

And then you found as usual the time card played its tricks,
You've chased the wrong train once again and yours goes out at six.
You've taken some gay billposter out and spent a deuce or V.
And then he calmly said: "Will you take the one-sheet boards from me?"

You've spent your life at bad hotels and eaten still worse meals,
With oleo and waiter girls all run down at the heels.
You've had your letters sent astray, your trunks have wandered, too;
With porters, clerks and baggagemen, you're in a constant stew;
And once a year you see your wife, now tell me is it so?"
"It is," replied the agent as he took his hat to go.

"Ah well," said good Saint Peter, as he opened the portals wide,
"I'm very glad to meet you, sir, just kindly step inside;
We'll try to make you happy, we have no extras here to sell,
For you're a poor old agent and you've served your time in hell."
—HARRY DAVIDSON.

The Playwright and the Public

By GEORGE P. BAKER, Professor Harvard University.

(The following is part of an article on "The Share of Playwrights and Public in Bettering American Drama," which appeared recently in the dramatic columns of the Chicago Record-Herald. Its author is a student of the drama along both theoretical and practical lines who sees in the numerous failures of the present dramatic season as proof of the increasing discrimination of the public taste.)

Some twenty years ago a witty Englishman of letters greatly delighted the young Americans in his group of hearers by his audacious and brilliant defense, for the better part of an evening, of the thesis that the great drama of the immediate future must appear in Russia and the United States. He entered on the thesis in sheer wilfulness in order to bewilder and tantalize his circle of too-admiring English friends, but in his words there was at moments a half serious ring which puzzled and excited the listening Americans. This man, knowing the United States well, evidently felt some basis of truth in the thesis he banteringly embroidered with his fertile fancy. It has taken twenty years for that half-playful prophecy to begin to come true—but coming true it is. Even a half-dozen years ago we still imported most of our drama—the best as well as worst—from abroad. Yet within three years an English critic of the drama said to me: "The greatest change I note since my last visit, some five years ago, is the great demand among you for plays by dramatists of your own, treating American life. Not even our English plays seem to be in the old demand. The gradual growth of a truer idea of what the drama is and may be in national life, of its possible educational, social and artistic significance, combined with the extraordinarily rapid growth of the theater-going habit, is responsible for this immediate and hearty response of our public to an offering of plays on American life by American writers. In matters of art the public is too heterogeneous, too unsure of the real value of its growing desires, perhaps too little conscious of these dawning desires to express such longings, or latent impulses, till some leader or innovator unites and stimulates the public as he first gives voice to what has been only a dumb desire or a latent wish." The late Bronson Howard, commenting not long since on what seemed to him an undue percentage of failures among recent plays, said in a tone commingled of irritation and failure to understand: "The dramatists are ignoring the public. They are writing to please themselves." Could anything be more distorted than that point of view? Of course, dramatists can not wholly neglect their public; indeed they must keep them constantly in mind—their susceptibilities, prejudices, ideals and affections; but the trouble with our drama for years has been that we modeled it on standards supposed to guarantee the public what it has liked and therefore always will like. That very belief is a contradiction. The public is very stable; it never can lead in matters of art and education, but must be led. Only by knowing what he wishes to do to please himself, and then so writing that he brings his audiences to accept—and delightedly—what interests him, can the dramatist write plays of permanent significance. He who writes wholly to please himself deserves to fail. He who writes wholly to please his audience may succeed, but only for the moment; the changing public will forget him as its mood of the moment shifts. The man who best in our drama combines the power to satisfy his artistic and the power in so doing to please his audience is its chief—Shakespeare. Again and again he wrote, not what his public would expect or naturally demand, but what his sense of truth to life, his artistic conscience, made necessary for his own peace of mind. Regardful, however, of his often-studied audience, he so modeled the presentation of what he wished to their permanent interests and sympathies as to win hearty approval for what had not been done before. Herein lies the significance of this newer movement in American drama, not simply among university graduates, but in general. These writers are not mere playwrights, not merely amused or cynical observers of life, nor do they pin their faith to any sets of hard and fast technical principles as sure to produce the "guaranteed success." Instead, observing life thoughtfully, whether for comic or serious treatment ultimately, they feel the impulse to individual expression in regard to it—in prose or verse, as the case may be. That the general public is tired of its old food, failure after failure shows. This appears, too, in the insistent demand for actors, managers and play-placers for fresh material, where ten years ago they would rarely consider anything except foreign goods or the work of men already famous. The theatre turns today not only to the writers trained outside the colleges, but to college and university bred men; it is hospitable even to the undergraduate writers. If this art of such enormous potential force, socially and educationally, is at last looking for aid to our colleges and universities, is not this exactly as it should be? A university or college existing apart from the life of the people, especially its artistic life, is an anomaly in a country like ours. Only in a comprehension of the university and the college by the masses, which, in turn, rests on a sympathetic understanding by college and university of the needs and longings of those masses, can our endowed institutions safely rest.

Olga Nethersole will open her coming engagement at the Van Ness Theatre with The Writing on the Wall.
